Bigger, Cleaner Yields with WIDE-FLOW FEEDING

Model 66 ALL-CROP Harvester Here's the 6-ft. machine with 5-ft.-wide cylinder!

Crops enter the wide cylinder in a thin stream—the right start for complete separation... better cleaning. Rubber-faced cylinder bars and concaves gently rub grain from each head, seed from each pod. Air blast separation behind cylinder, step-up straw rack, controlled air flow across sieves—all work together for bigger yields, cleaner grain or seed.

ALL-CROP is an Allis-Chalmers trademark.

Care Needed When Using Weed Killers

LINCOLN—Safety in the use of pesticides and weed killers can save lives, reminds William D. Lutes, extension farm safety specialist at the University of Nebraska.

Accidents with pesticides and weed killers appear to be due to four main causes—all preventable:

1. Leaving material exposed to children and irresponsible persons.

2. Failure to read and follow precautions on the labels.

3. Carelessness in the disposal of empty containers.

4. Careless handling and use of weed killer and defoliants.

Lutes urges the following precautions:

Do not keep control materials where food or foodstuff is stored or handled. Observe cautions to prevent poison residue on edible portions of plants.

Wash hands and face thoroughly after spraying or dusting, and do not spill materials on skin or clothing. Burn or bury all empty containers.

Use separate equipment for applying weed killers such as 2,4-D or 2,4,5-T. These materials cannot be removed satisfactorily and using the applicator for pesticide application may cause serious damage to valuable plants.

Always keep materials in original, properly labeled containers and out of reach of children, pets or irresponsible persons. Before use, note poison antidotes, warnings and caution on the labels of all chemical pesticides.
