Weekend Rain Cracks Torrid

Heat Wave Here

A days-long heat wave which found thermometers continually bouncing over 100 degrees was broken last weekend by cloudy skies which poured 2.19 inches of rain in this area and sent temperatures diving to more comfortable readings.

Mother Nature opened her rain barrage late Friday and continued intermittently through this morning. Overeast skies at noon today lent emphasis to a weatherman's prediction of scattered showers and thunderstorms to Rainfall will put a firmer foundation under corn crops at which farmers were beginning to cast wary glances after days of torrid temperatures and hot winds.

Precipitation for the weekend was recorded on the gauge at Schreiner's drug store. The gauge measured 1.27 inches from Friday night through Saturday morning, then recorded another .92 of an inch Sunday and this morning.
