Maryland Ends Hangings

The State of Maryland has officially ended hanging. The state still retains capital punishment but from now on capital punishment will be carried out in a gas chamber and not in the gallows.

The last man to go to the gallows in Maryland was Kelly Briley, a 35-year-old Negro convicted of a fatal shooting in Baltimore. And, although the gas chamber became available to the State of Maryland on June 1st, the law specified that it be used only for persons whose murder trials began after that date.

Neither the gallows nor the electric chair are modern ways of carrying out the death penalty. The gas chamber allows condemned men and women to pass out of existence painlessly and causes less terror and fear than either the gallows or the

The State of Maryland is following the modern trend in obolishing the gallows and adopting the gas chamber as its official mode of capital punishment. More and more states are likely to follow in the years immediately ahead, and rightly so.

Faith

Wiser men than the editor have written over the years that men must have faith in the future and in some of the things which touch and surround his life. We would not attempt here to be specific and to offer cheap advice on just what people must have faith in.

However we would remind our readers that one must have faith in something. If life is to contain hope and one's efforts are to be enthusiastic, then it is necessary to have faith in God, one's fellowmen, the hereafter and the value of right and justice in this world.

The strange thing about faith is that it, itself, produces wonderful results. The person who exhibits faith, especially faith in others many of whom do not enjoy such support, often produces surprising results.

Many a soul, abandoned by society. has responded to someone else's faith in him or her with admirable steadfastness A balanced philosophy, we would say, would be one which included the general assumption that in most people there is more good than bad.

Following this philosophy and looking for the good, one will find plenty of good in his fellowmen. Looking for trouble, he will find trouble. Therefore, it would seem best always to look for the best - the good in people - and, in a surprising number of instances, unexpected good will be
