THE DRIVER'S SEAT

How fast does an automobile accident travel?
On an open highway with a 60-mile speed limit, an accident may be moving at 120 miles an hour—the speed of the on coming car plus the speed of your own!
Admittedly, when you're heading for a pleasure spot, a party or a spin in the fresh air you'd just as soon keep your mind uncluttered by thoughts of impending doom. And if you're that complacent Joe who's "never had an accident" and takes a rosy view of the odds—you're flirting with the thin line of safety between caution and casual optimism.
Most of us are inclined to be lulled into a false sense of safety by the wealth of safety devices built into our new modern expressways. Huge, reflective signs point out directions, warnings and information visible for great distances, besides keeping us on our toes. And highway dividers lessen considerably the chances of head-on collisions and sideswiping.
But if your journey takes you over secondary roads that are poorly-maintained though heavily traveled, the odds in your favor zoom downward with each pound of pressure your foot exerts on the accelerator.
Suppose you're clipping along one of these out-dated roads at the maximum allowed speed. There might, or might not, be a railroad warning sign just around the bend. If there is it might be just as antiquated and inadequate as the road. Add an approaching train's speed to your own, and the ending to the story wouldn't be hard to estimate.
That same road holds numberless other dangerous situations such as narrow bridges, cars whose headlights are not visible beyond the next bend or beneath the brow of the hill, or a diminished width of road at the very spot where you must pass an oncoming vehicle. And the nice, bright signs posted on the modern expressway are as yet none existent on many such strips.
Food for thought for every motorist is the fact that he spends 80 per cent of his car hours jolting and jimmying along secondary roads. Even if he doesn't care about the number of teeth - and nerves - he shakes loose, he should be concerned at the potential and deadly dangers hovering over his complacency.
Next time you sit in the driver's seat, check your speedometer. Then remember that an accident may be traveling at twice your speed and neither you, your car nor the road is equipped to avoid accidents at such speeds.

Tops in Luxury CHEVROLET INTRODUCES IMPALA

Chevrolet offers in its 1958 Bel Air series two interior luxury in the low-price field. A new Impala models, named after and strongly reminiscent of a "dream car" in the GM Motormana. This is the Impala sport coupe, distinctively styled from any angle, and setting a new standard for interior luxury in the low-price field. A new engine, new frame and two new suspension systems are but a few of the many chassis advances. Impalas are grouped with the Bel Air, one of four new series of Chevrolets this year.

Farmers: Watch For Hog Flu

With Asian flu posing its threat to the nation's human population, livestock health authorities warned farmers today to be on guard against another type of influenza which is expected to take its toll of the country's swine population again.
November and December are the months when swine flu commonly occurs in thousands of hog lots, according to the American Foundation for Animal Health. It appears suddenly and causes a high fever, farmers should be alert for signs such as loss of appetite, thumpy breathing, coughing, a mucus discharge from the eye and nose, and prostration. When such symptoms appear, a veterinarian should check the animals to make sure whether flu or some other disease is causing the trouble, and to set up proper nursing and treatment.
With the right care, the animals may recover in from four to seven days. The sick hogs should be confined to a clean, dry pen, and given plenty of water and light.
