Roosting the Indians

One of the sorry pages in the history of the United States is the way the white man treated the Indian when he conquered North America. While we are not ready to abandon this community, or our own personal property, and turn it back over to the Indians, perhaps the Indians have the best claim to it.

Though we are not willing to undo all of the wrongs we have committed, we should be willing to refrain from continuing to commit such wrongs. Now comes the question of building the Kinzua dam on the Allegheny River. It seems that this dam would store water which would automatically flood 9,000 acres of the Allegheny Reservation.

The flooding of these lands would displace 1,000 Seneca Indians. These would be the descendants of the same Indians who were promised, back in 1790 by none other than George Washington that: "In the future you cannot be defrauded of your lands — no State or person can purchase your lands unless at some public treaty held under the authority of the United States. The General Government will never consent to your being defrauded, but it will protect you in all your just rights."

George Washington uttered some famous words in his time. We hope these words, which he uttered in 1790, will not become any more famous than they already are. Those opposing the building of the Kinzua dam say that three or four small dams could be built in its place, which would also control floods in the New York and Pennsylvania areas affected, and allow the Indians to remain on their land.

The Red Sub Threat

The reason Americans are reading so much about the submarine being the weapon of the future is that this military probability is already being exploited to the fullest by our most dangerous potential enemy, Soviet Russia.

The latest intelligence estimate on the number of USSR submarines available to the Soviets is much higher than the 350 or 400 unit estimates which we have heard in recent years, and some appraisals place the figure at a figure over 550 submarines.

But the number of Russian submarines in existence is not any more important than the report that the Red Navy hopes to have subs capable of firing missiles from underwater for distances of more than 1500 miles. This means that all the United States will soon be in danger of attack from rocket-firing submarines lying off the Atlantic, Gulf or Pacific coasts.

This prospect—and the Reds are expected to have these long range rocket-firing subs in the not-too-distant future—alarms those who have heretofore assumed that the primary missile danger being encountered was that from Russian-based ICBM's.

This explains, to a large degree, the degree of importance attached to the recent launching of an atomic sub-killer sub-

Howard's Homespun

Winter's not so bad, if it comes in no bigger or worse doses than we've had so far.

No amount of repetition of the golden rule (it's better to give than to receive) is half so effective as one instance of practicing same.

Remember how much a nickle used to buy and how infrequently a nickle for spending came a child's way?

If you can laugh at yourself, a little, when you're being most serious, solutions to every day's problems will come easier.

marine by the U. S. Navy. It is widely believed, among many top naval officers in this country, that the warship of the future is the submarine.

This prospect explains proposals in Congress in recent days for the construction of many more U. S. submarines, and a greater concentration on sub-killing types.

It is yet another indication of the ominous degree to which the United States has fallen behind the Russians in the armaments race, a race which might kill one out of every three Americans within a few years—according to some grim-talking defense experts. In addition to a crash program in the missiles field, the U. S. must institute a crash program in the submarine construction program. No lesser effort will discharge the government's responsibilities to the American people.
