Too Many Suicides

We read of suicides in the papers, but unless they strike close to home, we do not give them much thought, yet approximately 22,000 people commit suicide in the United States each year, almost exactly the number of American soldiers killed in Korea in three years of war. In 1956 there were 179 suicides in Nebraska, more than three times as many as the number of deaths from tuberculosis, and far more than died from all of the other communicable diseases combined. Deaths from suicide were almost 26 times as many as those from polio. What is back of this high death rate from suicide?

Dr. Richard A. Kern of Temple University, Philadelphia, estimates that approximately 85 per cent of suicide victims have mental disturbances and nothing else. Even in the 15 per cent that have some organic disease, he feels that the mental factor enters in, for it is not so often because of cancer, for example, but because of the fear that indigestion or some other discomfort is cancer, that a person may commit suicide.

One of the large life insurance companies lists ill health as the leading cause of suicide, with 40 per cent in males and 20 per cent in females, and it says that in their suicide attempts males are successful about 50 per cent of the time and females 25 per cent.

Statistics indicate that suicides are more common among the wealthy than the poor, and business leaders and executives are more likely to take their own lives than those of the lower classes. Rates seem to run higher in big cities.

An attempted suicide should be considered a physician rather than being challenged as a nuisance, since the patient obviously needs help of some sort. Depressed persons, physically ill, and those who for some reason have lost interest in living are among the suicide types. Fear, worry, anxiety, and tension all take their toll in suicide.

LINCOLN — State parks and the national guard have drawn the attention of Gov. Victor Anderson.

The governor said if re-elected he will ask the 1959 Legislature to start building up a fund for improving Nebraska's state parks. A "definite program is needed," the governor added, "and I'm going to lay it before the Legislature."

Past procedure, he commented, has been to hand out money for park development in a "dib" and "dab" fashion.

The governor indicated the program he has in mind will be in the vicinity of $300,000 to $500,000 per year.

In a separate statement, the governor took up the matter of the national guard and reports circulating in Washington about it.

The governor said there are reports from the capital of the nation that indicate a reduction in national guardsmen and units is being considered. He asserted that he is "disturbed" not only by the possible loss of national guard units in Nebraska, but by the fact a reduction in the overall program would mean less opportunity for young Nebraskans for part-time military training.

Nebraska has units of the guard in 30 communities. Drastic cuts would not only affect these communities, the governor said, but the nation's defense as well.

"I see no merit in cutting back an existing and efficient military force at a time when our

30 YEARS AGO

William Gilmour, 90, pioneer of Cass county, passed to the last rest at the home south of this city, having been a resident of the county for seventy-one years. He was born in Michigan but came west in the early fifties, settling first at Bellevue and later moved to Rock Bluff. Mr. Gilmour served in the second Nebraska infantry in the sixties in the Indian troubles in this part of the west. He was married to Miss Lucy Ellen Towner, daughter of Rev. Abram Towner, first county judge of Cass county — Troy L. Davis of Weeping Water filed for re-election as state representative from the 6th district comprising Cass county — Carl Hanacek had a narrow escape from death at the Oak street crossing of the Missouri Pacific railroad. He was driving west on Oak street in the car owned by Rudolph Skalak when the car was struck by the northbound train No. 103. When Hanacek saw the train he attempted to get clear of the track and this saved his life as the train hit the rear of the car and almost demolished it — Helen Jane Kopp celebrated her 9th birthday at her home. Guests were Rita Libershal, Lucille Vetesnik, Jeanie Vetesnik, Jane Rebal, Jacqueline Grassman, Mary Jane Kvapil, Betty Kalina, Joan Wales, Shirley Keck, Clea Koukal, Barbara Zitka, Pauline and Margaret Ann Pitz, Helen Jane Kopp.

Time-Sales Contracts

A legislative council committee, headed by Sen. Mervin Bedford of Geneva, is looking quietly into a controversial subject that affects a great many Nebraskans.

That is the matter of financing of motor vehicles. Bedford said one of the problems of the committee is persons who have been victimized by finance firms are reluctant to allow the committee to use their cases.

But, the Geneva lawmaker said, there will be no names used. He said it is important that his committee be able to see contracts involving shady dealings in order to come up with constructive legislation that is neither unfair to citizens or finance companies.

"A half dozen or so stinkers give the whole financial structure a bad name," Bedford said, "and it isn't fair to the honest and respectable firms."

Fair Board

The State Fair Board has sized up, in an annual statement, status of the annual exposition, which attracts thousands of Nebraskans.

Ed Schultz, board secretary, recommended no major construction be planned this fall or in the spring or summer of 1959. Schultz told the board it should allow what funds are available for construction to be held in reserve until a study of actual needs can be made.

After the 1957 exposition, the board authorized rebuilding of the race track from a half mile to five eighths of a mile, moving of the barns, and construction of new jockey quarters and a new race horse barn.

All this work is expected to be done before the 1958 exposition opens. A financial statement showed the board got $744,535 in revenue and spent $706,930.

Now that some of the hysteria over Sputnik is receding, I would like to call attention to a recent statement by Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Lewis L. Strauss. Strauss reported that the U. S. is "far ahead in nearly all fields of technical and scientific accomplishments" and "well ahead" of other nations in weapons and peaceful development of the atom.

Strauss added that "there is no place in our thinking for pessimism, gloom, despair. A year from now, if the public remembers, it will be heartily ashamed."

I am happy to give my full support to a drive by the Citizens' Committee for the Hoover Report. A "climax drive" now underway is aimed at action on five major legislative goals: modernized federal budgeting, unified procurement of common-use defense supplies, reduction of needless federal competition with business, a career administrator system and federal medical service changes.

In five years living costs in the U. S. have risen 63 per cent. In England they are up 18 per cent, Brazil 107 per cent and Bolivia 2,276 per cent.

I am very pleased that Ike is personally directing the Pentagon shakeup. I only hope that it doesn't result in any new offices to help straighten things out. Too many reorganizations end up with more specialists around to direct the old specialists who have become bogged down in the even older system.

You never know where the next request for federal tax money is going to come from. Sad-faced circus clown Emmett Kelly has called for federal aid to the circus to save that bit of Americana from oblivion.

Don't Blame Dark Yolk on Milo

Too much milo has been a problem all year but feeding it to your poultry laying flock is not causing some egg yolks to have a dark greenish color.

The dark yolk problem is really one of management and has nothing to do with the amount of milo in the laying flock ration according to John Skinner, Extension poultry husbandman at the University of Nebraska.

"The dark color found in the yolks of some eggs is the result of a build up of ammonia in a laying house when it has been closed for some time," Skinner said.

"The easiest way to correct this situation is to gather the eggs an extra time or two each day," he reports.

Excessive feeding of good quality milo actually may cause a slight lightening of the color of the egg yolk, Skinner said.
