Farm Spring Cleanup Urged

A spring cleanup around the barnyard on most farms can help eliminate one of the chief causes of "hardware disease" in cattle, according to a suggestion offered today by the American Foundation for Animal Health. Cows have a peculiar trait which sometimes causes them to develop "hardware" trouble. Foundation authorities say. It seems that cattle cannot separate from their feed the bits of metal, nails, wire, fence staples, and such items which may have been left in barnyards or pastures. These pieces of metal collect in the fore stomach, and may then work their way through the wall, piercing such vital organs as the heart or liver, and causing death. The best way to prevent this problem is to make a systematic cleanup of lots and pastures, collecting all such items. The Foundation suggests that now, before the heavy work season, is the time to do it. If an animal show signs that hardware disease is developing, a veterinarian can sometimes remove the harmful metals surgically. Symptoms of the onset of the disease include loss of appetite, a sharp drop in milk production, a variable fever, and the animal may make grunting noises, and walk with an arched back. Where owners wish to guard valuable animals against this condition, veterinarians generally insert a special magnet in the fore stomach. This magnet collects the metal particles and holds them in a position where they cannot do harm. Milk cows bred from 932 proved sires used by artificial dairy breeding association in the United States during 1956 produced an average of 11,301 pounds of milk and 477 pounds of butterfat. This compares with an average production by the dams of these same cows of 10,600 pounds of milk and 438 pounds of butterfat. U. S. dairy herds are thus constantly being improved by use of sires to pass high milk production ability along to their daughters, reports the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

A SALUTE TO NEBRASKA'S LEADERSHIP IN AGRICULTURAL PROGRESS

Nebraska's leadership in the adoption of new and improved agricultural methods is demonstrated by the rapid increase in irrigated acreage over the past five years—an increase that is greater, percentage-wise, than that reported by any other state.

Increased irrigation has contributed immeasurably towards keeping the state's total farm income at a high level, which in turn has contributed to everyone's prosperity.

The availability of a dependable supply of low-cost electricity to power the pumps has been one of the factors encouraging the spread of irrigation.

Consumers, playing a vital role in building a greater electrical Nebraska since 1939 and now serving more than 117,000 customers across the state, salutes this spirit of agricultural progress.
