Photos Figure In Court Case

Photos taken as evidence by the sheriff's office again played a part in a civil court case, as was revealed in the Arnold French case in Federal District Court in Omaha last week.

Some 15 photos of the scene of accident along with photos of truck log records were introduced as evidence into the case through testimony given by Cass County Sheriff Tom Solomon.

Cross examination of Solomon during the first trial (here) regarding the photos which brought about a mis-trial.

Photos taken at the scene of accident or crime play a major role in today's law enforcement work, according to the Sheriff. Solomon said he took up the art of picture taking, plus developing and printing of photos after it was discovered that it was difficult to obtain a photographer at all hours of the day or night.

Photos are often requested by insurance companies, lawyers and individuals. The price varies according to the size of photo, material used, and mileage consumed in obtaining the required shots. Solomon said "the most any one photo has cost a purchaser has been $4.

Solomon furnishes all photo work needed by his office in criminal investigation, to the County Attorney in his investigation of crime and deaths, and to the County Commissioners on desired road photos. The only cost to the county is for material used which the county purchases directly from a supply house, the sheriff said. Almost every major incident occurring in Cass County has been preserved for use, present and future on film negatives.
