Getting Something out of Life

Americans are the richest people on the face of the earth. In luxuries and labor-saving devices, they have more, per family, than any other people on earth.

On the other hand, it has been said, and rightly so, that Americans often get very little out of life. One cannot but be impressed by the great fun, wonderful family life, devotion and hard work and happiness exhibited in so many households in Europe.

One cannot but admire the attitude of many Europeans. Comparatively, they have quite little, and yet they seem to be happy, and life seems to be a wondrous thing as they weave their way through it. They get great satisfaction and enjoyment out of the smallest things, even if it is, in the case of a young married couple, looking out of the window together at the trains that go by.

Of course, one cannot cite a few simple examples and prove a point in a discussion of this kind. However, suffice it to say that some of the world's greatest scholars and wisest men believe that the average individual in western Europe gets far greater mileage out of the few benefits and pleasures he enjoys in life than do Americans — with their many. We are inclined to agree with that analysis. In the final test it is not how much money, or how many luxuries, or how much wealth, a family can amass.

The final test, and what life is all about, is whether through good and clean Christian living, through a humble and appreciative approach to life's pages, one can laugh, enjoy himself, and understand, to some extent at least, himself, others, and the world about him. One of the keys to the question is one's attitude and approach to life. Another is the fact that the happy people usually work.

Too many Americans do not work enough to be happy. There are too many elderly American women touring Europe, whose husbands have died in the pressure-game of piling up luxuries and riches, at a premature date, leaving the elderly women to roam over the world, lost and unhappy.

Old civilization can teach us much. America is a young nation, and even in this atomic age, we should take a page out of the book of some of the older cultures in western Europe and learn to get something out of life, take time to enjoy it, and remember that nothing is so important as to make it advisable to ruin our health in the pursuit of the dollar. — Borrowed.

Down Memory Lane

20 YEARS AGO

William Gerlach, residing south of Louisville, was severely injured when his car ran into a ditch along the Louisville road west of Plattsmouth. The car and the injured occupant was found by the driver of an ice truck enroute to Plattsmouth. He was treated at the office of Dr. L. S. Pucelik and taken on into Omaha to the St. Joseph hospital. He was suffering from a broken nose, four ribs fractured and compound fracture of the right hand as well as numerous cuts and bruises — A group of eight young men were called to the ranks of the Civilian Conservation Corps and will report at the camp at Weeping Water. The young men were Edwin Royer, Marion Kauble, Delbert Hobbs, Don McCarrall, Kenneth Jones, Irvin Ferguson, Stewart Gochenour, of this city and John Smith of Nehawka — J. D. Shrader, 75, member of one of the pioneer families of Cass county, died at his home in Chelsea, Mass. The funeral was held in the east — The Missouri river was on a rampage and threatening the low lands east of the city. The Ray Harold farm is being overflowed while the water surrounds the Missouri river docks and overflows into the farming lands west of the dock and south of the pumping station. Water is also reported in the low lands on the Gilmour farm south of this city — Oliver E. Taylor has returned home on a leave, completing his basic training at San Diego for naval service. He has served in the radio signal section of the navy. He has been in service with the battle fleet and has had a great deal of experience in his line of work — Joseph Henry Burton of Murray died at the ripe age of 88 at his home in Murray. He had been a resident there for 67 years. Two years ago he sustained a fall and has since been an invalid — R. Sheldon Giles made his first solo flight from the Council Bluffs Municipal-airport completing his required hours of training. He is working for a private license.

30 YEARS AGO

"Burlington Night" was held by the Chamber of Commerce and forty-five of the employees of the company were present to join in the interesting meeting. President C. C. Wescott told of the work of the Chamber in the past year and the three objectives of the coming year, a traffic bridge over the Missouri river, the Co-Operative creamery and the graveling program of the roads over the county, particularly that of the Louisville road. Judge James T. Begley told of the work of the Chamber of Commerce and the necessity for an organization for the community good — The Pappio creek has overflowed and covered the entire bottom, made necessary the closing of the highway from Fort Crook south. The Cotner bus was caught in Omaha and had to cancel the trip south — John Sander, a member of the class of 1928 was married in Council Bluffs to Miss Cynthia Skelton of LaPlatte, the wedding occurring at the court house. They are honeymooning and have not disclosed their plans for the future — Gertrude Valley entertained sixteen of her Campfire Girls at her home north of the city on the occasion of her thirteenth birthday. Prizes were awarded to Bernese Arn and Winifred Rainey. The party was followed by a slumber party.
