Breakthrough in Reducing?

What might be the most important development in some years in the effort to reduce one's weight is reported by Dr. Cecelia Rosenfeld, West Coast ophthalmologist, who has been using injections to curb the appetite and reduce weight in experimental work with a limited number of American patients.

Dr. Rosenfeld studied a method used and then—last Spring—observed his pioneer work first hand in Rome. His success by Dr. A.T.W. Simeons, of Rome, Italy, and her experiment results are both highly promising.

The Simeons theory is this: Most fat people are carrying around "locked in fat." The body cannot utilize this fat as food. This fat can be freed and utilized by the body, through injections of chorionic gonadotropin—an extract obtained from pregnant women, which frees reserve fat of prospective mothers to feed the foetus.

Because the body actually gets enough food and calories, when injections make available this otherwise "locked in fat," the usual sensations of hunger are absent and there is no appetite problem. More interesting, healthy skin fat is not disturbed and so the haggard or drawn look, resulting from some diets, is not produced.

Dr. Simeons believes that, rather than possible harmful effects, the system causes improvement in several fields, including those suffering with diabetes, high blood pressure, rheumatism, menstrual disorders, etc.

SCHWABACH, Germany — Specialist Third Class Don L. Haden, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Haden, Plattsmouth, Neb., recently participated with the 613rd Field Artillery Battalion in annual combat efficiency Army training tests in Germany. Haden, a clerk and driver in the battalion's Battery C in Schwabach, entered the Army in August, 1956, and received basic training at Fort Hood, Tex. He arrived in Europe in April, 1957.

The 24-year-old soldier is a 1952 graduate of Plattsmouth High School. Sweet clover hay is not toxic unless it's moldy, according to Extension veterinarians. Sweet clover is relatively hard to cure and may get moldy in the windrow. The moldy hay affects coagulation in cattle and they slowly bleed to death. If presence of mold is suspected, moldy hay should be fed alternately with other kinds of hay. Most affected animals die if not treated.

30 YEARS AGO

E. C. Hill, former storekeeper for the Burlington here, has established a chicken and turkey farm at Bethany, near Lincoln to which city Mr. Hill retired a number of years ago — A large frame barn at the home of Jack Hild, west of Mynard was destroyed by fire caused by being struck by lightning. The storm found Mr. Hild, his son, Arthur, and the hired man, Hateliff, some distance from the barn, and while they were struggling to reach the house they saw the lightning flash and a few moments later noticed the smoke rolling from the barn. They were able to get several horses and colts out of the barn and to a place of safety as the blaze spread very rapidly. The fire attracted the attention of the residents near the Hild farm and they hurried to the scene assisted in preventing other farm buildings from catching fire — Henry Becker of Union, while repairing his threshing outfit had a tool slip and lacerated one of his knees quite severely. He was off a few days but soon back on the job.
