PHS Grid Squad 'Hits'; Progress Pleases Coach

Plattsmouth's High's football squad, just four days along in practice, Wednesday began to "hit" and had good 30-minute sessions on both offense and defense that morning. Coach Bill Hawkins says he's pleased with the progress the boys have made so far, that the units into which the squad was divided from the first day have already learned most of the plays and assignments. Hawkins is using a tight-T formation. He's not quite ready to designate first and second team alignments but already has a pretty good line on the squad of 46. ## Street Paving Engineer Hired

Engineering work on five blocks of street paving here will be started soon but is unlikely any concrete will be poured until next spring. The City Council Monday night hired Henningson, Durham and Richardson, Omaha, to do the engineering. A representative of the firm said he thought it doubtful that a contractor could be brought in yet this fall. He said it would take about 30 days to draw plans and specifications, even though his firm began next week. Legal publication and contract letting would take another 30 days, he estimated. The engineer advised the Council to ready the plans and then try for a winter contract letting for better price results. He said contractors then would be done with the current season's work and in the market for work for next year. Mayor Grant Roberts suggested, too, that further work could be added to the project in the meantime. The engineer said the engineering work will be done so that additions can be made and spite earned by the morning's hard contact practice. Plattsmouth opens Sept. 12 at Crete and plays its home opener Sept. 19 against Beatrice. On the squad, so far divided only into backs and linemen, are:

Backs — John Konrst, Laur-

The youth said he ran away from home in Missouri Valley Monday night and stole a pickup truck from a farm south of Missouri Valley and abandoned it about a mile north of Plattsmouth after it ran out of gas. The youth was traced to Nebraska City and was one of two youth picked up for investigation by Chief of Police Iverson in Nebraska City and turned over to Solomon for questioning.

Repair of Cemetery Rd. Is Topic

What's to be done about Cemetery Road? The City Council Monday night discussed the street which is becoming badly pitted with holes and on which heavier and heavier traffic is moving. Mayor Grant Roberts brought up the subject and said he felt something ought to be done about repairing the street. Council members pointed out that it would be a little late in the season to get anything done yet this fall.

Bill Highfield, chairman of the streets committee, said the street has become so rough largely because of newly-created heavy traffic on it since the Louisville-Plattsmouth Road (State Highway 66) was closed for the start of surfacing. He said there is a lot of truck traffic as well as a big volume of car traffic using the street. Highfield said he doubted that oiling the street would be a solution since the truck traffic would be so hard on new oil. It was suggested the state might be solicited to help keep the street in shape if it is being used as an alternate route to Plattsmouth from the western part of the county while Highway 66 is under construction.

Sgt. Rogers, Union, Gets Unit Citation

Local people can look with a great deal of pride on the members of the Heavy Mortar Company, 355th Infantry Regiment, for performance of their work during unit training. This was the comment of Capt. Cecil Karr, commanding officer of the unit which wound up two weeks of field training at Fort Carson, Colo., Sunday. He said the Army Reserves of the company met the strict standards of training set up by the Continental Army Command "efficiently and effectively... at all times." Again this year, the 355th trained as an individual unit.

Although the efficiency rating of the unit has not been made known, it is believed it will receive a high rating for the training period as it always has in the past.

Karr said the members of the 355th maintained high moral, desire to do an outstanding job and esprit de corps. He said these ingredients are necessary for effective functioning of a unit of this kind.

Sgt. Clifford Rogers, Union, this year received the unit's citation as "outstanding soldier of the year for 1957-58."

The 355th arrived at Fort Carson Aug. 10, performed the necessary duties of "housekeeping" and was ready for field training early the next morning.

The unit received excellent training and accomplished a great deal by doing that training at camp which cannot be done at the armory," Karr said. He said it also gave the commanding officer a chance to evaluate the training done during the year in the regular armory sessions, determine what corrections ought to be made and decide on emphasis for subsequent armory sessions.

Training at camp consisted of:

Tactical field exercises, including selection and occupation of mortar positions and assembly areas.

Heavy mortar company on attack and on defense.

Special tactical operations, delaying actions, approach march, setting up company plans for fire support of the regiment.

Two days of firing on the range with 4.2 mortars.

Two night of bivouac with tactical night problems.

Karr said the men in the administrative and supply sections did an outstanding job.

Aug. 15, the full 355th Infantry Regiment, marched in review with Gov. Victor Anderson of Nebraska in the reviewing stand.

Aug. 16, the 89th Division parade completed the first week of training. The company had an outing at Rainbow Valley Lodge over the weekend.

Now back at the civilian occupations, the company is still looking forward to armory training, Karr said. The former Wyesell Garage building, which the unit occupies has been conditioned for training.

As a final notation, Karr notes "excellent chow was enjoyed at camp. Heavy Mortar had its mess steward and two cooks in the mess hall. They did a fine job."
