

Bottles in the Sea

A native farm boy in the Azores recently found a bottle on the beach. He took out the stopper and found a note inside.

The note had been written and placed in the bottle thousands of miles away. It had been dropped into the sea near the entrance to New York harbor — as a publicity stunt by the sponsor of a radio program. A reward was promised to the finder if the note was returned.

The native boy was shrewd enough to mail in the note and collect his reward—$1,000. That is one of the many bottle incidents which have been occurring all over the world's oceans for hundreds of years.

It will be remembered that messages in bottles have been tossed overboard by sailors for centuries, and that some eye-opening messages have been dropped in the ocean in bottles, and recovered.

Perhaps the greatest user of bottles, for messages transportation, is the United States Hydrographic office in Washington. The Coast Guard drops these bottles into the ocean and the messages tell the finder to report where they were discovered — to help determine ocean currents and the effect of the winds.

The messages in these bottles are printed in eight languages, but usually, especially with individually-sent messages, the words are in but one language — often a foreign language to the receiver.

Many stories have been told about bottles, dropped in rivers far inland, which eventually wound up in the oceans, or in other countries. Once, it is reported, a $12,000,000 estate was the value of a will which was written and placed in a bottle and dropped into the Thames River. It turned up years later in the Pacific Ocean. One might say, then, that it is wise never to underestimate the contents of a bottle.

Howard's Homespun

Why teach anybody to read unless he, or she, plans to read?

Eating is important in life; nevertheless, too much of it doesn't make for much living.

Modern life moves with a snap and a hustle, which come so fast that few of us have time to think.

The trouble with human beings is not that they lack horse sense, but that they lack human intelligence.

Whoever runs from an enemy permits an enemy to run his life.

Smartness is never synonymous with vulgarity and improprieties.

An intelligent individual visualizes an issue without waiting for it to be dramatized by personal clashes.

The quick action of Christine Soennichsen and W. R. Holly of the H. M. Soennichsen Co., prevented the store from the loss of a large amount of money from the cash register. Miss Soennichsen who had been at the cashier's desk in the store had left to wash her hands and as she emerged, she was startled to see some man reaching into the cash register, as she screamed, the man started to run to the front of the store as the clerks and customers started to rush to the scene. W. R. Holly was returning from lunch and was in the doorway of the men's department as the man dashed by. Mr. Holly took after the man who turned south at 6th street, and ran to the alley where he ducked in and started east and ran into the parking lot back of the store. He was overtaken by Holly and several others who had joined in the chase. On the return to the store it was found that the man in his flight had dropped a large roll of bills on one of the counters. When he was searched it was found that he had tried to conceal a $10 under his belt. Later the man giving the name of John Ayers was turned over to Sheriff Homer Sylvester. When first arrested, he had refused to give his name to Holly and Henry Lutz, one of the informal posse. He was remanded to jail to await arraignment on the charge of grand larceny — Ralph Mason has been named as coach, manual arts teacher at Mascot, Neb.
