

Mastering Our Troubles

One of the tricks of life is to learn how to master the troubles which confront us, day by day and week by week. Sometimes it takes a pretty strong faith to hold up under sudden crushing burdens, but time is a great healer and perhaps one of the greatest lessons of life is the realization that time and faith cure all problems.

The other day the newspapers ran stories telling of the sudden troubles which descended on Ernest Ahlberg, a Swedish printer, whose daughter has been an exchange student in the United States in recent months.

Ahlberg's wife has been seriously ill and there was some doubt whether she would live to see her daughter return from the United States. A few days ago her daughter was ready to leave and went to the airport to begin her return journey. Accidentally, she stepped into a turning propeller at the airport.

Critically injured, she lay near death at a hospital in North Carolina. Meanwhile, Ahlberg's wife was dying. In this situation Ahlberg learned that his daughter lay near death, four thousand miles away. He had to choose between the last hours and days with his wife and flying away to be at the side of his gravely injured daughter. They could both die while he was traveling, too.

His wife in a coma, he rushed to the United States, where he found his daughter somewhat improved, but as this is written it is still touch and go. What a decision to make! What hours to spend, flying the ocean, thinking of loved ones in such terrible circumstances! What a sad trip, to an unknown land!

Speaking of Books

Books from early times have been the source of really thorough knowledge, and this is still true today. And despite the craze of television — and the soap operas which fill the viewer's TV day — books are today still the safest, surest way to knowledge.

A survey not too long ago showed that people in various sections of the country spend a varying degree of their time reading books. The people in the South, for example, spent less of their time reading books than did people of any other section.

Some attribute this to the warmer climate and the tendency of people to get outdoors in the milder climate and "do" more than read. But whatever the reasons, and regardless of the compensations, the South suffers when its citizens do not read books as does any other section of a country, or any people.

Another depressing thought for the intellectual is the type of book most people read. It should not surprise anyone, for it is the same type of thing that the average movie-goer pays to see. It is something heavily smeared with sex, evil, or scandal. All of us should read more good books. It would be a good habit to form the routine of reading one good book a month, or a week — or however often your daily life allows. In a short time, the reading of these interesting, educational and fascinating books will pay great dividends.

Bernard Galloway, graduate of the class of 1928 of the Plattsmouth high school and an alumnus of Peru State Teachers college, has been elected as assistant coach at Jackson high in Lincoln and to teach in the junior high school. Mr. Galloway has since graduating at Peru taught at Borchester and Hebron — Members of the high school basketball squad of 1918 met at the Stewart cafe to honor their former coach, C. A. Spacht of New Rochelle N. Y. The squad of 1918 had a great deal to do with securing the gym in the school building completed that year. The boys of the school joined in excavating for the creation of the basketball court. All of the squad were present except Harley Cecil of Denver and a letter of greeting was sent him. Those present were: Hilt Martin, traveling for a large wholesale house, Adolph Hallas, president of the South Omaha Savings bank; Carl J. Schneider, assistant cashier of Plattsmouth State bank; Joe McCarthy, employed by the Burlington at Omaha; Roscoe Hill, president of the Hill Hatcheries of Lincoln; John P. Sattler of the Sattler Funeral Home; Ernest Schubeck of the H. M. Soenichsen Co.; C. A. Marshall, inspector for the government in here; G. E. Brubacher, merchant of Murray — Lewis A. Tyson, former county clerk and early day resident of Cass county, died at his home in Elmwood. Mr. Tyson was for years engaged in the drug business at Elmwood. He was elected county clerk in 1901 and re-elected two years later. During the eight years in office the family made their home in this city — John P. Cobb, 76, president of the American Exchange bank, died in his sleep at his home in Elmwood. He was thirty years president of the bank. He was a brother of Bess Streeter Aldrich, noted author and also a resident of Elmwood.
