Winter Bouquets

Have you been wishing that you could save some of the beautiful colored leaves and grasses that we see along the road sides these fall days? You can your family's enjoyment this winter by following these simple directions.

Collect a variety of plant materials from the roadsides and fields. Look for interesting shapes, lines and textures in grasses, rose hips, yucca stalks, mullin, dock, corn tassels, grains and other seed pods and berries.

Some plant materials keep best if they are tied in bunches and hung suspended in a dark dry place for about 2 weeks or until they are thoroughly dried.

Ferns, grasses and flowers may be dried by placing newspaper with board and other weights over them. The paper may need to be changed several times before they stop absorbing moisture. This takes several weeks.

Use a 50 per cent glycerine and water solution for leaves. Put them in solution as soon as they are picked. It takes from 2 to 3 weeks for them to absorb as much of the solution as they can. Wipe leaves with an oiled cloth to keep them from curling. Another suggestion is to rub a warm iron with paraffin and then lightly press the leaves.

Use of shellac on seeds and pods such as milkweed will keep them from splitting and opening. Plastic spray may be used to "fix" pods.

Prick gourds with a large needle so they can dry out.

It is not necessary to color plant materials for arrangements. The soft muted natural colors show off the fine details of line, shape or texture. If the plant material is colored, it should be done with restraint. Shellac is often used before painting over a porous pod so that it will not absorb so much paint. Oil paints may be used with good results. Either dip the entire pod, spray or apply with a soft brush. Show card paint, bronze powders or liquid may be used. Standard dyes can be used to stain dry grasses or flower spikes of a feather nature.—Nancy Sutton, Home Extension Agent.
