Homemaking News Notes

The members of Cass County Extension clubs are giving more than average thought to the family's future these days as they study the many services offered by a life insurance policy. Because there is no one best policy that is suited to all families they are examining the facts for each of the basic kinds of life insurance. Who knows—there might even be some policies lying around that the family thought had lapsed in which there is still some value.

The Fall County Home Extension Council meeting will be held Oct. 27 in the Agricultural Auditorium in Weeping Water. The meeting, beginning at 1:30 p. m., will include planning for the coming year's Home Extension program.

To revive a wool garment quickly after wearing or unpacking, hang it in the bathroom and steam until the wrinkles disappear. Then let it air dry.

Home sewers can use scraps of fur or old fur pieces to add a rich touch to fall and winter garments. This touch can be added very inexpensively by re-conditioning old furs for new uses.

Some home sewers feel that working with fur is too difficult but it need not be. Fur should be cut with a razor blade. It can be seamed by hand with a close overcast stitch or with a zig-zag machine stitch. The seams should be pounded gently with a hammer to make them lay flat.

To clean fur, dampen corn meal or fine sawdust with a dry solvent. Rub the dampened mixture well into the fur with your hands. Shake, brush and air the fur. Badly soiled fur may require a second treatment.

Fur has a nap or flow which must be matched when joining pieces together. You can mark the direction of the nap on the skin side of the fur before cutting to eliminate mismatching the nap—Nancy Sutton, Home Extension Agent.
