

8 and 40 Lauded for Aid to U. S. Tuberculosis Program

Eight and forty members of Cass County and the nation have been lauded by National Jewish Hospital at Denver for their "outstanding record of 27 years of humanitarian service in supporting the tuberculosis children's program" at the famed free-care, nonsectarian medical and research center.

The citation from the hospital's board of trustees, transmitted by Irene Cox, NJH liaison chairman for the American Legion Auxiliary's Eight and Forty, to Helen John, chapeau of Salon No. 441, was announced by local press relations chairman.

Mrs. John said the hospital, which was opened in 1899 with the motto, "None may enter who can pay, none can pay who enter," will be host to Eight and Forty members from all of the nation April 18 at "Connie's Day," an annual visiting event for the organization which this year will honor Mrs. Connie Sunday of Blairsville, Pa., chapeau national.

Praise of the Eight and Forty contribution came in a 60th anniversary review of achievement by National Jewish Hospital in the fields of research and treatment for victims of tuberculosis and chest diseases. For 27 of those years, Mrs. John pointed out, the Eight and Forty has supported the program for tuberculous children.

Quoting from the review, she said:

"For 60 years, National Jewish Hospital at Denver has been a haven of health and hope for thousands of adults and children, regardless of nationality or faith. Throughout the years admission has been based on only two factors. The first, does the applicant have tuberculosis and can he be helped? The second, is he unable to pay for private care?"

"In view of the fact that tuberculosis, still the number one killer among infectious diseases, invariably requires long and expensive hospitalization, with or without costly surgery, treatment is most often beyond the financial resources of wage and salary earners, or even owners of small businesses. Recognizing this, the admissions committee at the hospital makes a careful check of economic necessity in all medically-eligible applications.

"The children's department, which accepts patients from infancy on, is particularly renowned for its success in combating tuberculous meningitis, which, until a few short years ago, was 100 per cent fatal. Children are now saved in more than 90 per cent of the cases.

"In addition, the children's department provides complete facilities for schooling from nursery classes through high school, under accredited teachers, and the records show that every pupil has been equal to or ahead of normal grade upon discharge from the hospital."

Commenting on the continued growth of the hospital, whose patient population is consistently maintained at capacity, Mrs. John said:

"The advance achieved in the fight against tuberculosis and chest diseases at National Jewish Hospital have proved the value of intensive hospital treatment. Applications for hospitalization are more numerous and will continue to grow, as more and more people are brought to the realization that tuberculosis is not a disease to be suffered in shame, but fought openly. Those who fight it openly, with modern weapons, are almost certain victors. The thousands who come to this hospital with disease-wracked bodies and emerge whole men, attest to that.

"National Jewish Hospital at Denver is supported almost entirely by voluntary gifts, large and small, from organizations and individuals, from all parts of the country."
