

Mr. and Mrs. August Bradway Visit Here

Plattsmouth Lucky On Fire Water Supply

Plattsmouth residents can feel fortunate in regard to their water supply (the subsoil supply, that is) as compared with other cities in this locality. Bellevue two weeks ago doubled its water pumping capacity to a million gallons a day and was in the throes of a serious water shortage the last of last week. A break in the drought was a possible solution.

With reserves dangerously low, Mayor Vernon Woddlie and the City Council had asked Bellevue residents to limit their use of water to necessary household needs for several days.

Two new wells and large reservoirs have been added to the system there recently to increase the supply.

The danger in Bellevue in case of fire was called critical. The fire department estimated 230,000 gallons of water needed to fight a major fire. At one time, the supply was down to 130,000 gallons.

Plattsmouth, despite a large number of new additions and housing units in the city has been able to carry the demand without trouble.

"Being Natural" Helped June Allyson to Fame

Would-be motion picture actresses who constantly worry about their figures, their weight, their voice or their health should stop immediately and take a good long look at June Allyson who stars with Jeff Chandler in Universal International's "Stranger in My Arms," which continues tonight and Tuesday at the Cass Theater.

"Because," declares petite June, "many times those qualities have nothing to do with your becoming a success in Hollywood. In fact, often-times a skinny figure or funny voice can be just the stepping-stone to stardom you've been waiting for."

And June is a gal who should know what she's talking about. Weighing a strolling one-hundred pounds—"if the wind is right"—and standing just one inch over five-feet tall, June is the perfect example of a star who made it to the top of the Hollywood heap with the cards stacked against her.

When she was nine years old June suffered a serious spinal injury when a tree, hit by lightning, fell on her. Invalided for many months, June was determined to walk again and as part of the corrective exercises to build her muscles, she practiced dancing. It was her proficiency in this art that enabled her to land her first job in show-business when she fully recovered, a job dancing in the chorus of the Broadway hit, "Sing Out the News," from which she eventually moved to screen stardom.—Adv.

To Beans or Not to Beans Is the Question

There was a question the other night in a Plattsmouth household about the supper menu—already prepared.

"Do you realize how hard I worked planting those beans and cultivating them?" asked Dad.

"Do you realize how hard we worked stooped over picking those beans?" Mom queried.

"Do you realize I don't want beans for supper?" Young Daughter asked.

The outcome? That's a family secret.
