Mediocrity in Television

The television networks have put up large sums of money to finance an organization which is supposed to combat the growing attacks on television. The attacks center around the theme that television is bogged in mediocrity.

The television networks claim that this is not so, and that television must contain a variety of programming — to meet the wishes of all segments of the population. They hope to counter some of the criticism with the new organization, although it is specifically stated that criticism often serves a purpose, and that the object of the new organization is not to discourage constructive criticism.

Of course, there is some merit on both sides in the current controversy. Anyone who likes sports, for example, will readily concede that television has filled a wonderful spot in bringing to the far-away fan the tennis championships, golf tournaments, Rose Bowl games, the World Series, boxing matches, etc.

On the other side of the question is the charge of mediocrity in the many dramas which fill the airwaves at night. There are those who believe that the current fare is what Mr. and Mrs. John Doe desire. There are others who think that an approach pitched to a higher intellectual average would not only be appreciated, but enthusiastically welcomed and supported by the vast majority of the viewing public.

In any event, it is good to see that the charge of mediocrity in television fare is causing some action. As in any field, some of the programs and some of the commercials are at a low ebb in the world of television. On the other hand, there is much about which the industry can rightfully boast. It seems that the final answer would best be determined by a representative poll among viewers. The poll, if it were to be accurate, should be conducted by a completely independent source, and would be an expensive undertaking.

Also, and this is the controversial feature of the poll proposal, the poll should include the better- educated to a greater degree than the population ratio would normally dictate. For, if television is to reach the maximum potential, it should inspire, educate and uplift — in addition to entertaining. And, we have never been convinced that presentations could not be both educational and entertaining or inspiring and entertaining at one and the same time, The usual crime portrayal, or the over emphasis on moral rot and sleazy plots, while possibly entertaining, are not necessarily the best entertainment.

the faith in Omaha, came to Plattsmouth to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Schlater celebrated the first mass of the church in Plattsmouth, attended by some seventeen members of the church. Members of the Catholic faith assembled at St. John's church at 10:30 a, m. and headed by the Plattsmouth band followed by members of the St. John's and Holy Rosary congregations marched to the park. Among the members of the church societies and church members were Monsignor George Agius, Father Joseph Sinkula of the Holy Rosary church and Father E. C. McFadden of Avoca. At the park the altar had been arranged in the band stand where was awaiting the Most Rev. Louis B. Kucera, bishop of Lincoln and his party of prelates. The crowd numbered several hundred who stood through the rainfall to hear the mass. The choir and organ were sheltered from the worst of the rain in a tent. The pontifical high mass was celebrated by Bishop Kucera, assisted by Father McFadden as deacon, Father Thomas Bowdern, SJ, of Creighton as subdeacon, Father Joseph R.
