worked all night. By 8 a.m., street commissioner Elmer Gochenour said, they "were just holding our own."

Soon after, though, the snow and wind let up and faster progress was made.

Wednesday and today, sanders were at work and plows continued to work the city, opening less traveled residential streets. Plowing was difficult with many snowbound cars preventing a clear swipe of roadways.

Tonight, the street crew planned to windrow snow on Main Street and perhaps some of the interesting downtown streets. Motorists are asked to cooperate by keeping their cars off the streets tonight. Cars left on the downtown part of Main Street tonight will be towed away at the owner's expense so that snow can be cleared.

Highway 50 two miles south of Louisville was blocked for two hours during the height of the snowstorm when a trailer-truck loaded with 33,000 pounds of lime jackknifed into the ditch.

The truck's front wheels blocked one lane of travel until a big wrecker was brought from Omaha to tow it out.

The truck was enroute from Central City to Omaha.
