Let Grass Get Started

"Don't graze your pasture too early," farmers were warned this week by Harold Gilman, Extension Conservationist of the UN. of Nebr.

"Give the grass a chance to build up its vigor and the storage of some energy. Having two to four inches of growth on short growing grasses and four to eight inches of growth on the taller species prevents runoff of water and reduces evaporation."

A healthy and vigorous stand of grass discourages weed growth and this in turn makes possible a high producing pasture, Gilman pointed out.

Proper grazing management is essential if we expect to obtain maximum yields from any pasture, he said.
