Nebraska Potential Seen as Producer of Vegetable Oil

A staff visit with the officials of Pacific Vegetable Oil Corporation and the Federal Utilization Laboratory at Albany, California indicates that Nebraska has considerable potential as a producer of vegetable oils.

Nebraska is already a big producer of Safflower oil and PVO has an oil extraction plant located at Sidney, Nebraska.

More than passing interest is being shown in the commercial production of castor beans in Nebraska.

Officials at the Federal Laboratory estimated that the industrial market for castor oil may increase from 10 to 50 times. About 90% of the castor oil now used in the U. S. is imported.

The need for domestic acreage was heightened by a move by Brazil to restrict the exporting of castor oil. That country wants to keep its castor oil at home to promote local industrial development, the PVO officials said.

Federal castor bean test plot statistics show that Nebraska yields, both irrigated and non-irrigated, have consistently averaged higher than those of Texas, Oklahoma, Mississippi and Kansas.

Dr. George Kohler, Chief of the Field Crops Laboratory at Albany, California, said he was of the opinion that Nebraska is certainly on the right track by trying to encourage and promote the growing of industrial oil crops.

The PVO officials estimated that the Nebraska castor bean acreage demand could eventually exceed 50,000 acres.

The oil crops are also an attraction to industry. The first industrial benefits the state can gain are from the processing of the oil.

While manufacture of products from the oil is a possibility, most of this will probably continue to be done in established manufacturing localities since the manufactured products are high-cost items that can easily bear the freight rates of the raw materials.

Dr. Kohler mentioned another crop which may soon be in large demand. This is dimorphoic hotchica oil, from the cape marigold, a brother to the ordinary ornamental marigold flower.

He said that while commercial markets haven't developed yet because the crop is being only grown on federal test plots, the oil is even more unique than castor oil and a commercial demand will likely develop as soon as commercial acreages can be grown.

Since Nebraska is already in the oil processing business, it would seem that any further expansion along these lines would be valuable and profitable.

This office intends to encourage the diversification of Nebraska farmers into the production of vegetable oils.

Wheat Did Not Winter Well

Farmers who have wheat planted, are aware that the late planted wheat, did not winter well. Now the decision must be made to leave it or to plant another crop.

Four factors can be considered; remaining stand, vigor of surviving plants, distribution of remaining plants, plants, prospects for weed control.

South Dakota researchers say that if the rows are 12" apart:

One vigorous plant per inch equals 100 per cent stand.

One vigorous plant per two inches equals 50 per cent stand.

One vigorous plant per four inches equals 25 per cent stand.

"Thinner stands can be expected to grow taller and mature later, than full stands. Test weight from light stands is usually lighter.

If the stand is fairly uniform, even though thin, heavier-than-normal stooling compensate to a considerable degree for the thinner stand.

Heavy weed growth can be a problem if the wheat field has a low percentage. Broad leaved weeds can be controlled by spraying with 2-4-D at the proper time. — Clarence Schmadeke, County Agent.

Mother's Day won national recognition on May 8, 1914. On that day President Woodrow Wilson signed a joint resolution of Congress recommending that Congress and the executive branch of government observe the special day.
