CAPITOL CORNER

By Rep. Glenn Cunningham

Washington, D.C. (Special) — Washington is a city of memorials, statues and plaques. Most famous of these are of course the memorials to Washington, Lincoln and Jefferson.

There are now so many memorials and statues to so many people that the people who plan and sponsor such things must be running low on ideas.

In fact, last week there was a plaque dedicated to a park bench! It happened to be a rather special park bench, though — the one where noted financier Bernard Baruch used to sit and think, in Lafayette Park, across Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House.

The Boy Scouts placed a plaque on this bench to mark Baruch's 90th birthday. Baruch — financial adviser to every President since Wilson — was unable to journey from New York for the ceremony.

I have commented before on the new office building (cost $4 million) being built for Representatives. It was strongly opposed by many when it was first started in 1957. One of the first resolutions I introduced in 1957 would have scrapped plans for this third office building for Congressmen, but the resolution was pigeon-holed without action.

This structure is so large that the exterior marble will have to be furnished by two of the leading companies in the business. The Capitol Architect explains that the building is so big that not one firm in the country could supply all the marble in the time required.

Developments in military and space research have already been converted for use by private citizens and industry.

Automatic pilots, radar systems and other flight equipment of advanced design for missiles and space vehicles are bringing improvements in similar aircraft equipment.

Surveying equipment is being revolutionized by measurement devices developed for missile guidance. Drilling by jet power may prove of great benefit in mining, quarrying and construction.

A glass fiber device developed in a space research is already in use in dentistry and surgery. When placed in the mouth during dental work or in the area of surgery, a magnified televising of the action is possible.

Automatic gun cameras developed for space projects are now being used at banks and turnpike toll stations.

In agriculture, a new forage harvester has been developed from missile engineering principles.

Research for military uses and space flight is creating new industries as civilian applications are found. There are now an estimated 5,000 companies and private research organizations in the missile and space field.

State Ag Bid 'Launched for Paper Industry'

By Pearle F. Finigan
State Director of Agriculture

Nebraska's Deputy Attorney General, Clarence Meyer, approved Nebraska Agricultural Products Research Fund Committee contracts with the Institute of Paper Chemistry last week.

The approval made possible the early signing of the contracts and launched Nebraska's effort to capture a bigger market in the paper industry with agricultural products.

Plans are going ahead to hold a field day to acquaint Nebraskans and their neighbors in Kansas, Iowa and Colorado with castor beans, the state's newest industrial oil crop.

Present plans call for the field day to be held on Sept. 28, at the Howard Smith farm east of Hastings.

The meeting will be sponsored by the Nebraska Department of Agriculture, South Central Nebraska Agricultural and Industrial Corporation, Hastings Chamber of Commerce and the University of Nebraska.

A large-scale variety test on the Smith farm will give those attending an opportunity to make a first hand comparison of various varieties.

A recent inspection tour found the plants doing well for the most part.

Specifications are now being prepared by the Department to let bids on the loading and handling equipment.

Other Projects
Midwest Research Institute of Kansas City is expected to submit additional proposals to develop marketable products from high amylose starch derived from high-amylose corn.

An increase in the high-amylose starch market could well mean increased acreages of this commercial type of corn in the state. The state's first commercial acreage is being grown this year in the Central City area with the cooperation of the Merrick County Agricultural and Industrial Corporation and the American Maize Products Co. of Roby, Ind.
