Oct. 1, Nov. 25, Feb. 13, March 1 and March 25.

The average yield obtained from the Oct. 1 seeding date during the period was 35 bushels per acre. This compared with an average yield of 17 bushels for seedings made Nov. 25; 13 bushels from Feb. 13 seedings; seven bushels for seedings made on March 1 and no yield for the March 25 seeding date.

No complete failures were noted for fall or late winter plantings Swinbank revealed. Yields obtained from the March 1 planting date ranged from zero to 25 bushels per acre. "Results of this experiment are of special interest to farmers whose wheat may not come up until spring because of drought or to those who are considering a wheat crop on land from which sorghum or corn is now being harvested," Swinbank concluded.

Rescue Breathing

APPROVED METHOD FOR PERFORMING ARTIFICIAL RESPIRATION

No. 1—Foreign Matter in Mouth

If there is foreign matter of any kind visible in the mouth of victim, wipe it out quickly with your fingers or with a cloth wrapped around your fingers.

When a person has ceased to breathe, as a result of accident or disease, it is highly important that artificial respiration be started at the earliest possible moment.

IF YOU ARE ALONE

If you are alone on the scene with the victim, in the absence of equipment or other help, Rescue Breathing (mouth-to-mouth) is the most practical way to restore breathing.

Late Wheat Plantings Not Good Yielders

LINCOLN — Winter wheat planted as late as Thanksgiving will usually produce a crop in eastern Nebraska. However, yields on the average will be reduced about 50 per cent if planting is delayed that late in the fall.

This information comes from J. C. Swinbank, University of Nebraska Extension agronomist, based on data obtained from testing at the Agricultural Experiment Station in Lincoln. In these tests, winter wheat was planted annually for 13 years at the average dates of
