Sukarno on U.N.

Although few Americans realize it, Indonesia is the sixth largest country in the world, in population, and therefore it is of some importance in world affairs.

President Sukarno, of Indonesia, who recently attended the United Nations session in New York is therefore a man of world importance.

On his departure, he made some interesting statements, among others expressing a desire for a meeting between Eisenhower and Khrushchev. But the most interesting he made was that the United Nations has become a cold-war battleground, unable to achieve as much as had been hoped.

This, Sukarno says, is causing many nations to lose faith in the U. N. In addition to this, Sukarno said he agreed with Khrushchev that the structure of the United Nations should be reorganized and that its headquarters should be moved from New York.

These views from one of the leading "neutralists" in the world indicate that Khrushchev has made some progress in his recent efforts in New York. He has impressed Sukarno that the United Nations should be reorganized, and moved from New York.

The United States, which foots most of the bill for the United Nations, which originated it, and which has supplied most of the troops in United Nations campaigns (such as Korea) finds itself in the position of having an increasing number of neutrals criticize New York as the site of the U. N.

If the sixteen new nations of the United Nations and others which will soon be admitted, go along with this appeasement approach the Western powers may find their former majority in the U. N. disappearing as the neutrals and new nations attempt to appease the communists.

A Plan for Escape from Fire May Save Lives

Fire strikes without warning. Every two minutes fire damages a home somewhere in the United States.

Would you know what to do if fire broke out in your home tonight?

There are definite steps you can take to be prepared, the National Board of Fire Underwriters reminds. To know how to escape could save your life and those of members of your family.

First, work out an escape plan. Do it now. Be sure everyone in the house is familiar with it.

And keep this procedure up-permanent in your mind:

* If fire strikes your home, first get everyone out of the house.

* Then call the fire department.

If the fire has gained headway, the first two or three minutes after you discover it may be the most important minutes of your life.

An Escape Plan Now for organizing an escape plan:

1—Get all members of the family together and figure out two possible escape routes to the ground from any upstairs bedroom. If one of the two escape routes is cut off, you will have the alternate one. Make sure every member of the family is familiar with the two routes, also any guests who may be stopping with you, and also the baby sitter. Work out this escape plan, and rehearse it.

2—Suppose you are sleeping in a closed upstairs bedroom, wake up, and smell smoke! Don't rush out into the hallway immediately. Go to the door and place the palm of your hand against it. If the door feels hot, it may be that the hallway is already aflame and filled with hot and toxic gases. Either use another escape route or go to the window, awaken people by shouting "Fire!" If there is a phone in the room, quickly call the fire department.

If the door does not feel hot, open it slightly. Hold your head away, brace the door with your foot and put your hand across the opening to determine how hot and smoky the air is. If the hallway appears to be cool and there are no flames or smoke pouring up the stairway, you may be able to use the regular route of escape.

However, if there is any ques-

Spray Eggs with Oil To Maintain Peak Quality

LINCOLN — Nebraska egg producers are being advised to treat the shells of eggs with oil or oil compounds as a step in producing a top quality product.

"Why Oil Helps Egg Quality," is the title of a new circular released by the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture and available at County Extension offices.

Author John L. Skinner, University Extension poultryman, points out that paraffin base mineral oils have been used to seal egg shells for more than 150 years. Until recently, however, this treatment had been associated with eggs being held for storage for prolonged periods or eggs being shipped and in transit for a considerable length of time.

"Today, this is no longer the case," Skinner stated. "Many marketing agencies are requiring producers to 'oil' all eggs within 24 hours of the time they are laid."

Oil does not add to egg quality, but it does aid in retaining quality already present, Skinner explained.

Oil seals the pores of the shell, slowing down evaporation of moisture and dissipation of gases. In the process of sealing the shell, the oil also enables the egg to better withstand movement and transportation where variations in temperature and humidity are apt to occur, Skinner noted.

The type of oil normally used to "process" eggs is a light-weight, odorless, and tasteless mineral oil that has no color. It can be obtained from poultry supply houses or egg marketing agencies.

"To be most effective, the oil must be applied shortly after the egg is laid," Skinner emphasizes. "This will usually mean as soon as the egg is gathered, cooled and cleaned, and certainly before the egg is 24 hours old."

Procedures on applying the oil are spelled out in the publication E. C. 60-1417.

More Hogs for Spring Market

LINCOLN — Based on fall and winter farrowing figures and intentions in the 10 Cornbelt states more hogs will be coming to market during the late spring and early summer of 1961 than during the same period in 1959.

This analysis comes from University of Nebraska Extension farm economist Fred Olson, writing in Cornhusker Economics, published by the College of Agriculture.

While farrowings from June through August, 1960, were seven per cent below a year earlier, intentions to farrow from September through November were three per cent above a year ago, and intentions to farrow from December through February are four per cent above a year earlier.

Coupled with this expected quick up-turn in hog production is a change in the seasonal pattern of farrowings, Olson noted. "Fall farrowings have increased from 39 per cent of the annual total in 1950 to 43 per cent in 1959. If hog producers follow their intentions, this will increase to 46 per cent this year," the University economist explained.

Research work done at Indiana indicates that if 47 per cent of the pig crop were farrowed in the fall, the demand for pork would be the same for the fall and spring crop.

"This means that the prices for the fall pig crop will be about the same as those received for the spring pig crop," Olson stated. "Prices will be stronger for early fall pigs than for the late fall pigs," he concluded.
