Time Most Precious

If someone asked you to name your most valuable possession, you probably would not answer: "Time."
But think about it for a minute. What else is it you have that must be used correctly now, or pass forever a long life's road and never return — and your supply of which gets smaller every day, and hour?

If time is your most priceless possession, it stands to reason that you should use the always shortening supply of it well. A Presidential candidate, some years ago, used a good phrase. He spoke of the "unrepentant minute." That is a good description. The minute or hour once gone, never returns — not that same one.

If you use it incorrectly, now, you have missed the boat. So, the lesson is to spend your time wisely. Get all you can out of it. Actually your time is what concerns you. Time does not die and fade away — time is infinity. But you and I die and pass from the scene.

So our portion of time is a priceless possession. It is the only thing you can't increase in this life. You only have so much, and you will never have as much tomorrow as you had today. That's pretty good argument to do something worthwhile today. It's worth a thought.

A STITCH IN TIME...

Illness can be cured more quickly, more easily, and at a much lower cost when the ailment is diagnosed early and treated promptly.

When you feel below par, or suffer recurring symptoms, an early visit to your doctor is the "stitch in time" that saves you worry, pain and money.
