

SNOW IN THE WHEAT — The thin white bottom showed a lot of life shortly after this picture was taken Friday.

AIRBORNE — About 1,000 geese, mostly snows and some Canadas, let Area Manager Harold Edwards of Plattsmouth and a photographer get to within 60 or 70 yards before they decided they'd had enough interference and took off.

WAITING — The flight circled overhead until the intruders left, then settled down to graze in the wheat again. Edwards says the area has about twice as many geese now as it had at the same time in its first full season last year. Some of the geese may stay with a flock of 40 permanent resident Canadas, most will go south for the winter.

Farm Wife Vital to Farm Safety

LINCOLN — A University of Nebraska safety authority has appealed to all farm wives to help in eliminating corn harvest accidents.

Rollin Schnieder, Extension safety specialist at the College of Agriculture, commented that the farm wife can be a vital factor in the development of attitudes toward safety among all members of her family.

"The rash of corn harvest accidents this fall has come about as a result of carelessness on the part of operators," he stated.

It may take continuous reminders from home to be sure

Mr. and Mrs. Joe West in Omaha.

Visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Neumann Sunday were Mr. and Mrs. Bob Martin of Papillion, Mrs. Jim Carmichael of Plattsmouth and Francis Neumann.

that safety practices are followed in the field when the problem might seem easier to solve through an unsafe practice, Schnieder pointed out.

This kind of continuous safety emphasis can most effectively be carried out by the farm wife, Schnieder suggested.

"After all, the whole family is affected as a result of incapacitation of the breadwinner," he declared.

The University specialist listed these safety rules of which the farm housewife should constantly remind her husband:

1. Stop the picker before cleaning, adjusting or lubricating.
2. Keep all shields in place, especially the shield over the power take-off.
3. Wear safe clothing. Ragged, loose clothing contributes to accidents.
4. Prevent hurry and fatigue as much as possible.

Education Will Pay Dividends

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Education and training will pay bigger dividends in the next decade than ever before, Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell said in releasing the 1960-61 issue of "Job Guide for Young Workers."

He said occupational trends show that professional, technical, and other jobs requiring educated and trained workers expand the most. On the other hand, competition for beginning and unskilled jobs will be particularly keen as the 1960's bring the greatest influx of young people into the labor market in the Nation's history—the result of high birth rates during and after World War II. Mr. Mitchell urged young people planning to get jobs after graduating high school to "weigh carefully the long-run advantages of jobs you are considering against immediate gain." He said technical or professional training after leaving high school "will give you definite advantages in finding a job and advancing when opportunities occur."

"Get all the information you can about jobs and occupational fields before making a job choice," the Secretary advised youths. "Broadening your knowledge of the job market will improve your chances of getting into rewarding fields of work. Important changes are constantly taking place in the labor market, where more than 4 million firms provide employment in over 24,000 different kinds of jobs."

The new Job Guide says trends indicate that "opportunity will knock" during the next decade in these industries: Construction, because of the growing number of households, increased spending for schools and highways, and rising volume of business activity; in finance, insurance, and real estate, as a result of rising levels of income and growth of industrial and urban areas; and manufacturing, along with new products and processes.

Secretary Mitchell said the pamphlet, which gives information about jobs, occupational trends, and job requirements, will be used by thousands of high schools which have cooperative arrangements with local offices of the State employment services. Under this program, counseling, testing, and placement assistance is given high school seniors planning to look for full-time employment when they graduate. An estimated 300,000 high school seniors will be given aptitude tests and counseling services through the school and employment service program this school year, the Secretary said.

Copies of the Job Guide may be purchased from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D.C., at 45 cents each.
