

Study Shows Education Pays in Future Earnings

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell said the decision to quit high school can cost a young man thousands of dollars in future earnings.

The secretary based his statement on a detailed study, just released, of the early work experience of high school dropouts and graduates who terminated schooling between 1952 and 1957. Four thousand youths were interviewed in seven communities across the Nation.

These were among the facts revealed:

- Young people who drop out of high school, earn less than graduates, have to take less skilled jobs, and have higher rates of unemployment.
- Differences in earnings tend to become greater as years out of school increase, reflecting the better basic education and promotion potential of graduates.
- When interviewed, 15 percent of the boys dropouts were earning less than $40 a week, as compared with only 3 percent of the graduates. A weekly salary of $80 or more was being earned by 31 percent of the graduates but by only 20 percent of the boys who had quit school before completing their high school studies.

A similar pattern of wage difference existed among the girls. Nearly 40 percent of the girl dropouts earned less than $40 a week, compared with 14 percent of the graduates. Nearly half the girl graduates were in the $50 to $79 wage bracket, while only 19 percent of the dropouts were in this category.

Unemployment among boys was three times greater for dropouts than for graduates, and among girls it was four times greater.

The proportion of boy graduates in skilled and semi-skilled jobs was much greater than for dropouts, many of whom were employed as service or unskilled workers. The majority of girl graduates found jobs in offices, whereas girl dropouts were more likely to be employed as waitresses or in other unskilled work.

According to the study, graduates advanced at a swifter rate into more highly skilled jobs.

The new labor Department publication, which follows an earlier and less detailed report published this spring by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, noted that dissatisfaction with school (including boredom with school subjects, dislike of teachers, and other general complaints) was the single major reason given by both girls and boys for dropping out of high school. The second most important reason for girls was marriage; for boys it was "to go to work."

Mr. Mitchell said industrial and technological advancement today and in the next decade calls for more skill and training on the part of workers. But many young people will not be sufficiently trained for the kind of work that society needs to have done. He said the study found that a great majority of both graduates and dropouts had no plans for further education or specialized training. When asked what kind of work they would like to do, they mentioned, with few exceptions, jobs which were already within reach.

Copies of the new bulletin, entitled "School and Early Employment Experience of Youth," may be obtained from the Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., for 50 cents each.

Fire Alarm This Morning Proves to Be Groundless

This morning a force of workers were engaged in clearing off some lots in the south part of the city, site of the A. B. Rogers housing project, in course of their work it being necessary to burn sheds and outbuildings.

Residents of that section seeing the blaze, turned in the alarm for the fire department, only to find it was an authorized blaze.

A force of men and bulldozers is at the scene to stop any possible danger from the fire.

"All the Fine Young Cannibals" Coming to Cass

Coming Sun., Mon., Tues., Dec. 18-19-20 to Cass Theatre, Plattsmouth, Neb.

Natalie Wood and Robert Wagner, two of the screen's most popular young stars (they're Mr. and Mrs. Wagner in private life) appear together for the first time in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "All the Fine Young Cannibals." Co-starred are Susan Kohner and George Hamilton, in his first picture since "Home From the Hill," with another top role played by famed singer Pearl Bailey.

A strong drama of today's youth facing a changing world, "All the Fine Young Cannibals" is as unusual as its title, which stems from the picture's theme of the struggle of four young people to find happiness, a struggle in which they come close to destroying each other as well as innocent bystander who happen to get in the way.

Chad Bixby (Robert Wagner) is the offspring of a Dallas minister who has shown nothing but indifference to his only son. Salome Davis (Natalie Wood) is the eldest daughter of puritanical parents. Catherine and Tony McDowall (Susan Kohner and George Hamilton) are spoiled children of wealthy parents. In their search to find love, their hopes and fears are revealed, and in their eagerness to grab at life with both hands, no matter what the cost, they are brought to the brink of tragedy.
