Tips Given on Killing Brush During Winter
LINCOLN — During winter months either basal trunk or cut stump treatments can be used to eliminate unwanted woody plants.
John Furrer, Extension agronomist at the University of Nebraska, says 2, 4-D or 2, 4, 5-T or both can be used in oil as the killing agent when either method of treatment is used.
"The ester formulation of the chemical is diluted with kerosene, stove oil, distillate or similar oil. The chemical should be diluted down to a 2 per cent solution. Most 2, 4-D and 2, 4, 5-T esters are formulated as 40 per cent materials. Adding one part of the commercial formulation to 20 parts of oil gives a 2 per cent mixture," Furrer states.

"This 2 per cent mixture should be sprayed on the freshly cut stump surface or applied to the lower two feet of standing trees. When treating stumps make certain the mixture is applied evenly to the outer edges. The application should be extended toward the edge of the bark. When treating standing trees," Furrer says, "it is important to make the treatment completely around the tree and all the way to the ground level."
Trees and their susceptibility to 2, 4-D and 2, 4, 5-T are as follows:

2, 4-D — American Elm, Box Elder, Chinese Elm, Cottonwood and willows.
2, 4-D and 2, 4, 5-T — Ash, Black Locust, Hackberry, Mulberry, Red Elm and Oak.
2, 4, 5-T — Honey Locust, Osage Orange.

Farmers Are Capable of 'Too Much Production'

LINCOLN — Agriculture is an industry out of balance with our growing economy, Nebraska Agricultural Experiment Station workers were told here Friday.
Everett E. Peterson, Extension agricultural economist at the College of Agriculture, told the group during the closing session of their annual conference that "the farmers are now and will continue to be capable of a 'little too much' production."

While U. S. population is growing at an annual rate of 1.3 per cent, farm output has increased by over two per cent per year since 1950, he explained. This continued out-running of domestic demand by farm production is the key to the farm problem of "a little too much."

Per capita real income is expected to increase 50 per cent in the next 10 years. But per capita consumption of farm products will rise only 7 to 8 per cent, he pointed out, as the demand for food is very inelastic. Peterson quoted a U. S. Department of Agriculture report which estimated that farm output will need to expand by 35-40 per cent above the 1950-53 level to provide for domestic and export markets in 1975.

"This need can be met, he commented, "simply by applying more farms technology presently known, with no allowance for new developments which are certain to come in the years ahead."

A small increase in total production depresses the prices farmers receive for their products and reduces gross and net farm incomes, the University economist said.

"And, farmers now buy over 2/3 of their production supplies from non-farm sources, compared to about 1/4 in 1925. Hence net income is especially vulnerable to price declines or yield reductions."

He termed agricultural adjustments called for as "truly heroic proportions," and listed several goals which might be strived for through federal, state and local programs:

"A land retirement program which emphasizes land use changes and conservation by starting at the lower end of the productivity scale and working upward. If broad enough, it might replace price supports and production controls, but would mean "banking" about 60 million acres at a cost of one to 1 1/2 billion dollars a year.

"Continued research and education, especially on products and practices to reduce unit costs of production and to meet consumers' changing demands in the food line, as expressed in preferences for meat-type hogs, leaner beef.

"Search for better ways to use our agricultural abundance to relieve human misery in other nations, and in doing so, positively oppose the spread of Russian domination.

"Consumption subsidies for low income groups.

"Financial aid in moving and adjusting to new jobs, or "homesteads in reverse." This would be coupled with more information to farm people on opportunities in other occupations, including living conditions, training needed, and where training can be obtained.

"The 'rest of us' have benefited greatly from adjustments made by agriculture and will continue to do so. On the balance sheet of costs and benefits from farm programs, many advantages or 'subsidies in reverse' can be noted," Peterson said.

He mentioned abundance of high-quality food and fibers; low farm product prices relative to non-farm incomes; people raised, educated at the expense of rural families and released from agriculture to work at other industries; expanding market for industrial products.

So That Explains It
Man, looking at some neckties tossed one or two aside rather contemptuously. Lingered after having made his purchase, he noticed that the clerk put those he had so positively rejected in a separate box. "We have orders to keep such ties apart from the others," the clerk explained, "that is, after they have been turned down by several customers, as these have been."

"What becomes of them?" inquired the other.

"We sell them to the women who come in here to buy ties for men," was the reply.
