The Second Surest Thing

Editors Note: A survey by the University of Nebraska School of Journalism Depth Reporting Class indicates that 25 of the 53 members of the 1961 legislative session would favor the "right" tax-broadening bill. The senators agreed that taxation would be probably the biggest issue of the coming session. This is the last in a series examining Nebraska's taxation - past and present. Today's installment: The Pros and Cons.

By Carroll Kraus
School of Journalism Class

Indications are that development of a suitable broadened base that will please everyone and still bring enough revenue to run government won't be an overnight job. Previous limited "meetings of minds" have broken up with little accomplished. Wide gaps exist in the various groups' beliefs.

For instance, Herman Groom, president of the Omaha Central Labor Union, says his group opposes a broadened tax base and believe that present tax laws are sufficient if enforced.

Richard W. Nissley, president of the Nebraska AFL-CIO, said, "We cannot say at this time if we favor a certain broadened tax system until our committee of state board members meet and voice their views. But there has been an indication that the board favors an income tax only providing all resources have been analyzed."

He said the Nebraska AFL-CIO at its 5th annual convention in Grand Island last October passed a resolution opposing a general sales tax, concluding that it "can be accepted only at a last resort to save public service when no other practical alternatives are available."

"Taxes on food, heat, light and clothing should not be necessary in an economy celebrated for its productivity and in a country which honors itself for productivity and compassion towards its poorer citizens," Nissley said.

He said the Nebraska AFL-CIO favors a "tax group of dedicated citizens and a group of tax specialists to analyze our present system for discussion of the problem we face as a state and what has to be done to correct them."

On the other side of the fence, John Lynch, executive secretary of the Nebraska State Education Association, says the NSEA "favors any form of a broadened tax base, but prefers a combination sales and income tax to more nearly equalize the tax burden among all classes of citizens" and is working with "any and all" organizations seeking a change in the tax base.

Another group behind a broader base is the Nebraska State Grange.

Nebraska Master G. A. Spidel of Lincoln says the Grange favors a tax change because "the farmers who constitute 20 percent of the population receive from 10 to 20 percent of the income of the state, pay 50 percent of the property tax for the state purposes. Thus they are paying about 2 1/2 times what they should, based on ability to pay as measured by income."

He said the Grange believes that the property tax would have to be retained along with other taxes when and if the tax base is broadened since it is less subject to economic swings than income or sales taxes.

However, Spidel points out that "there must be exemptions in the sales tax that will protect the farmer from actually having his proportionate tax burden increased. This means that purchases of farm equipment and feed, seed and fertilizers must be exempt."

The Grange has published several articles this year concerning a possible change in the tax base in its "News Sheet." In the April issue, it states that "in their demand for tax reform farmers have sounded an uncertain note. About the only thing on which they agree is that they want a tax change only if it will bring an immediate tax reduction to them personally, and that it must be so designed as to prevent future tax increases."

Fears of government, fears of revenue spending sprees and fears of higher equipment and living costs were listed as some of the reasons the farmer shows a "disaffection" for "protecting the status quo."

The News Sheet said, "The search for tax reform to benefit the farmer and home owner will be fruitless until the farmer realizes that the opposition is following successfully the principle of divide and conquer." The propaganda effort beamed at maintaining the status quo in taxation has been amazingly successful.

In the February-March issue of the News Sheet, it was pointed out, however, that the demand for change in the tax system on the part of farmers "is not as unanimous as many people think."

Another farm group, the Nebraska Farmer's Union, has in recent years favored the broadened tax base "to the extent of favoring a state income tax to serve as a source of additional revenue in order to prevent excessive increases in the property tax." The Farmer's Union, however, has opposed the institution of a general sales tax, according to President Elton Berck. He said it was felt a sales tax would be discriminatory since farmers "are traditionally and historically large purchasers of equipment, supplies which they need to use" in farming.

Berck says farmers feel that an income tax would be more acceptable since it would be more nearly based on the ability to pay. In addition, under drought conditions affecting agricultural income, farmers would not be forced into paying higher taxes as they would under the sales tax system "pretty much without regard to whether they had a crop or not."

Freshman Legislators 27 to 77

How do the fifteen freshman Nebraska legislators compare with the whole Legislature in age, experience, education, family numbers, and religion?

The previous column of this series found the typical Nebraska legislator to be 55 years old, with one chance in three of being a farmer or rancher, one chance in four of being a Methodist, having between 2 and 3 children, and a member of many civic, fraternal and professional groups.

The average age of freshman State Senators is 57, with their ages ranging from 27 to 77. One is in his 20s, one in his 30s, two in their 40s, three in their 50s, five in their 60s, and three in their 70s. Eleven of the freshman are over 50, and all are men.

The odds are just short of one in two he is a farmer or rancher. Seven are in this category. Three are bankers, and one each, an attorney, trust company employee, retired farm implement dealer, retired botanist, and pharmacist.

Chances are the same as for the whole Legislature - one in four. Two indicate their church as Christian or Episcopal; and one each, Catholic, Presbyterian and Lutheran. Four list no church preference.

The new State Senator is more likely to be a college graduate than his more experienced colleague - nine are. He is also more likely to be a University of Nebraska graduate - seven are. One has two years of college; two are high school graduates; and three do not indicate their educational attainment.

He's likely to have a family, but his family averages two children, compared with three and 3 for the more experienced legislator. Of the eleven freshman legislators who indicate they are parents, three indicate one child; three, two; and three, four; and two indicate three children.

Freshman legislators indicate they belong to Masonic orders, Elks, Knights of Columbus, Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, the Chamber of Commerce, the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Bar Association, Farm Bureau, Farmers Union, Stockgrowers, and Livestock Feeders Association.

Freshman legislators average two years older than the veterans, are more likely to be farmers or ranchers, college graduates of the University of Nebraska, and have fewer children. Otherwise, they are like their experienced associates - one of your neighbors and serious about doing the best job they know how in solving state problems.

Will Castor Beans Pay?

HASTINGS - The potential income from castor beans is considerably higher than for corn at current prices, a University of Nebraska agronomist declared here Friday.

"This is true of both net and gross income," said Dr. David Kittock, who is in charge of the University's castor bean research work in central Nebraska.

"As with most crops, the higher the income the more hazardous is production of the crop. The main problems in growing castor beans that are not important in corn production include the following:

- Castor beans will not stand "wet feet." That is, soil which is continually saturated with moisture.

- Castor beans are not as competitive with weeds in early growth stages. As a result, there is a need for better weed control. Timely use of available cultivation equipment should adequately control weeds in most cases."

"We harvested 964 acres of castor beans in Nebraska last year," Dr. Kittock stated. "The average yield was 1,227 pounds per acre for an average return of $63.85 per acre to the grower. The top yield under irrigation was 2,200 pounds per acre. Under dryland conditions, the top yield was 1,201 pounds per acre. Based on returns and yields in 1960, it looks like castor beans will become an established crop in Nebraska agriculture."

Lyndon B. Johnson, Vice President-elect:

"I think Senator Kennedy made some very fine selections. It is a group of men who will work well together."

Nehru, Prime Minister of India:

"I think future safety by Laos depends on not adopting extreme courses."
