Louisville High Has Science Fair

LOUISVILLE (Special) — Wednesday, May 3, the science department of Louisville High school welcomed the public to a variety of scientific displays at the first annual Science Fair.

There were displays and demonstrations given by the Physics and Chemistry students. Among the more popular of these displays were: the high frequency electricity demonstration by Jim Brown; the extremely cold temperature display by Diane Stander and Kay Albert, and a vacuum demonstration and "fire water" exhibit by Dorothy Christianson and Carolyn Stohmann.

A very fine crowd of about 200 people visited these displays and gained a wider appreciation of the scholastic training the current students are receiving.
