This 'n That In Agriculture

Tractor Field Day

The 10th annual University of Nebraska Tractor Power and Safety Day will be held July 20 on the College of Agriculture campus in Lincoln.

Corn Borers

Nebraska corn producers were urged Friday to watch for first brood corn borers in early-planted corn during late June and early July.

Robert E. Roselle, University of Nebraska Extension entomologist, says that first corn borer moth was taken in a light trap at Lincoln on May 31. Several moths have been caught since then. Field observations indicate that pupation is well along. The peak of corn borer emergence should occur about mid-June.

"Moths that emerged early may not have found corn tall enough to their liking," Roselle explained. "Eggs may be deposited on small corn, but larvae normally fail to become established. Corn that is about 35 inches in extended height is very favorable for egg deposition and larva establishment.

"It usually pays to control first brood corn borers when fields show 50% or more of shot-hole or pin-hole feeding signs in
