New Method Seen for Grain Starch

By Pearle F. Finigan
State Director of Agriculture

A chemical reaction has been developed by Midwest Research Institute which gives a high yield of a new starch product.

According to scientists working on the project, the product can probably be produced cheaply. Possible large-scale uses and practical methods of commercial production are now being considered for the product.

Since starch is obtained in large quantities from wheat, corn and milo, increased starch utilization would provide additional commercial outlets for these crops.

Some of the important practical applications for the new product may be in the field of paper technology. The substance may be capable of increasing wet strength and grease resistance in paper.

The Midwest scientists will cooperate with the staff of the Institute of Paper Chemistry at Appleton, Wisconsin, in exploring potential paper industry uses. Nebraska also has three other projects at the Institute of Paper Chemistry.

Interest is spreading in establishing an electronic recovery system for scientific information. Ralph Reed of Nebraska has been actively exploring the possibility of cataloging scientific papers dealing with various agricultural commodities.

If the system were successfully established, and there is every indication to believe that it could be, scientists would be able to get a list of all scientific literature written on a given topic in a matter of minutes from an electronic machine instead of spending weeks in a library scanning indexes.

A regional research effort to find new uses for agricultural products received the backing of the 12 state regional conference of the Council of State Governments at a recent meeting at Rapid City, South Dakota.

Reports made on Nebraska's L. B. 722 program prompted passage of a resolution supporting the establishment of similar programs throughout the mid-west.

CAPITOL CORNER

Congressman
GLENN CUNNINGHAM

Washington, D. C. (Special)—All Americans are behind the President in his determination to stand up for our rights in Berlin. His request for $3.5 billion more for our defense forces will probably be granted by the Congress.

One thing disturbs many Congressmen, and that is the approach of this administration to defense and non-defense spending. On one hand we are told that there are sufficient taxes available for all the new billions of dollars in welfare programs and other non-defense programs proposed by the administration.

But we are told that our defense needs will have to be financed by borrowing. We certainly do not have two U. S. Treasuries—one for defense and one for non-defense items. Everything must be paid for by the same U. S. Treasury.

It seems peculiar to me that we are supposed to be able to afford the domestic programs, but we have to borrow and add to the national debt to pay for defense programs.

Who is kidding whom? We have one budget in this country. Defense and non-defense spending are both in the same budget. Who says it is the defense spending that forces us into the red? The figures show clearly that for the past few years it has been the non-defense spending which has shot steadily upwards, while only moderate increases have been made in defense spending.

I say we can afford the defense spending—whatever is necessary. We must be strong and area served by the Weeping Water FLBA. Elliott reported only 0.3 per cent of the member-borrowers were behind on the payments on June 30, compared with 1.4 per cent last year.

Elliott forecast brisk loan activity for the remainder of 1961 due to a trend toward more efficient farms, the need for adequate credit sources, and a desire to stabilize credit by substituting long-term real estate borrowing for short-term debt.

The Weeping Water association is one of 107 FLBA's in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Wyoming served by the Federal Land Bank of Omaha. The local association makes long-term Land Bank loans in Cass and Otoe counties.

Clifford C. Cooper, Weeping Water, is president of the local FLBA and Walter C. Reimer, Syracuse, is vice president. Other directors are Herman L. Bornemeier, Elmwood; Ivan G. Althouse, Waverly; and Howard F. Baltensperger, Nebraska City.
