55 Miles of Interstate Being Built in Nebraska

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association

LINCOLN — The boxscore is beginning to build up on Nebraska's Interstate Highway.

The 52-mile stretch between Lincoln and Omaha now is open. It cost $42.5 million to construct. There are 13 miles of two-lane interstate open in the Kimball area.

At present, 55 miles of the super highway are under construction.

Of the 55 miles, 5 are near Omaha, 18 near Lincoln and 32 west of Grand Island.

State Engineer John Hossack noted that although the 4-lane highway open now connects Lincoln and Omaha the two cities are not the only ones to benefit by the project.

An 8-hour traffic study between Gretna and Dodge street in Omaha revealed cars from 29 different states and 56 Nebraska counties used that portion of the super route, Hossack said. Drivers will have to get used to a set of new conditions on the Interstate.

attempts to add to physical attractiveness of the grounds for the thousands who will flock to the fair annually.

Purchasing Department
The State Purchasing Department is expected to be in the news more in the coming months.

By law the department head, called the purchasing agent, has authority to buy all articles used by state agencies, except the University of Nebraska, the teachers colleges at Wayne, Chadron, Peru and Kearney and the Board of Control.

The purchasing agent also sells surplus state property.

In 1943 the Legislature directed that the purchasing agent be named by the governor, with approval of the Legislature. Pay was set at $3,000.

Today, the agent gets $7,500 per year.

In addition to buying about $15 million worth of goods yearly for state departments, the agent supervises the statehouse central mail agency, where all mail is metered and dispatched.

The current purchasing agent is George Morris, who headed a Republican movement in the last campaign for Democratic Gov. Frank Morrison.

The purchasing department is not a separate division of government, but is a division of the state tax commissioner's office. By law the agent does not have to take bids on state purchases.

Council Committees
State senators who are members of study committees for the next 18 months are beginning to go to work.

They have a number of weighty state problems to look into before the next Legislature convenes in January of 1963. The normal procedure is for numerous public hearings to take testimony on an enigma.

Then, this is sifted and the committees will go into huddles late in 1962 to begin drafting reports to the next Unicameral. These reports will be discussed at a meeting of all the study committees in November of next year. Success of bills drafted after committee studies has been high.
