Fishin' Tackle? Here's How . . .

Ray Uher of Plattsmouth caught a bonus while fishing with his family near Harlan County Dam this past weekend. Ray had his line out and the boat was barely moving when he felt a tug on the line.

Reeling in, he found a 4-pound catfish on his hook.

The bonus . . . an expensive rod and reel which the fish had previously taken from another unknown fisherman.

Ray says, "you don't often get that kind of bonus when you go fishing."

CAPITOL CORNER

By Rep. Glenn Cunningham

Washington, D. C. (Special)—A House subcommittee starts hearings this week on my bill to amend Federal laws pertaining to obscene matter.

My bill, and companion measures introduced by many other Congressmen, would greatly strengthen existing laws pertaining to distribution of obscene material to minors.

It is obvious that older people are not affected as much by pornography as a teen-ager. Thus I have long felt that our Federal laws involving obscene matter should take this difference in experience and judgment into consideration.

I am very hopeful that early action will be taken on this legislation and a stronger law will result. Two proposals I offered last year in this field were adopted by Congress and have already been of great value to Federal officials trying to stamp out the flow of such obscene material.

An amazed House subcommittee recently received testimony from a high official who has apparently convinced himself that he is more powerful and wise than the entire U. S. Congress.

The man is Edward Martin, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, who appeared before a House Agriculture Subcommittee considering disposal of surplus agricultural commodities. Martin was asked why a certain proposed trading agreement between this country and a South American nation had not been completed.

The country had sent a trade mission to the U.S. with instructions to trade their sugar for our surplus wheat. Martin said he did not agree with the policy as set forth by the Congress in this regard. He even said he had discouraged the visiting foreign officials from adhering to the U. S. policy, which is to trade our surplus farm products whenever possible instead of buying foreign commodities outright with tax money.

If you have ever heard me say that bureaucracy is bad, perhaps this will illustrate why I feel that way. These administration officials never run for office, never have to explain to the people why they take certain actions, never face the test of having their decisions affirmed or rejected by the public—the taxpayers who pay their salary.

Mr. Martin's brash comments indicate he feels he is above the power of the U. S. Congress and superior in judgment to the men and women chosen by the taxpayers to look after their interests in Washington.

It is amazing, but I fear that Mr. Martin is not the only one who goes merrily on his way despite the wishes of the people and the Congress.

Yet there are those who would have the Congress delegate more and more of its responsibilities to these same people in the executive branch.
