'Citizen-Sailor' From Murdock Trains in Maine

"Citizen-sailor" Naval Reservist Orris C. Richert of Murdock is currently undergoing two weeks active training duty at the Naval Air Station at Brunswick, Maine.

Richert is a Chief Aviation Machinist attached to Naval Reserve Patrol Squadron 883 which since Aug. 14 has been conducting training to test and improve the proficiency of the squadron pilots, crews and ground personnel. During the period of Aug. 17-20 this squadron participated in a Submarine Launch Assault Missile Exercise (Operation SLAMEX) which involved fleet submarines, fleet destroyer and destroyer escorts, and patrol type aircraft. Operation SLAMEX was designed to test the ability of Naval Reserve Squadrons to carry out an operational order with fleet units.

The two weeks stint of active duty for Chief Richert ended at Olathe, Kan. Aug. 27 at which time he will resume his civilian status as a "Weekend Warrior," drilling one weekend each month with his squadron at the Naval Air Station at Olathe.

In civilian life, Chief Richert operates the Farmers Oil Company at Elmwood.
