Want To See A Man Milk A Rattlesnake?

Lincoln —Ever taste rattlesnake meat, or see a slithering venom? Both goings on will be yours to do and watch at the Game Commission's big State Fair exhibit.
Wayne Tiller, associate editor of OUTDOOR NEBRASKA, draws the dangerous assignment of milking Nebraska's four poisonous snakes—the prairie rattler, timber rattler, massasauga, and copperhead. The whole show will take place behind the safety of plate glass in the Natural History Building shared by the Game Commission and University of Nebraska State Museum. Location is immediately north of the fish building.
Those persons with a yen for the exciting and different will have a chance to sample rattlesnake meat at its best.
Most of Nebraska's nonpoisonous species plus a teeming family of horned lizards, captured two weeks ago in the state's badlands, will also be exhibited. The harmless snakes include clowning hogsnose and limber coachwhip.
Inside the building the Game Commission will also present two black-light spectacles showing the hunting and fishing opportunities that existed in Civil War days contrasted with those of today.
The usual myriad of fish will show in the popular fish building. Bobcat, adult and fawn waterfowl are among the species in the outside wildlife pens. One extra is a yearling buffalo from the Niobrara Game Reserve near Valentine. The animal will be shot with a special drug so that it can be loaded and shipped to Lincoln.
Probably the biggest addition is a 48-foot-long pool for fly-casting, spincasting, and bait-casting demonstrations. Conservation officers will be on hand to give helpful pointers and assist fair goers in learning the different casting techniques. A range for shotguns will also be in business, again with conservation officers passing on shooting know-how.

State Legislative Session Cost $2,281 Per Day

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association
LINCOLN—Final figures show the 1961 session of the Legislature cost Nebraska taxpayers $2,281 for each of the 126 days it was in operation.
Total cost of the session, a record in length but not in bills introduced, was $287,485, according to Clerk Hugo Sr. Sr. earlier had estimated the figure at $255,000.
The daily bill compared with $2,014 for the 1959 Unicameral which held the previous record for length.
Higher salaries of members and the length of the session were the primary reasons for the boost in cost, Sr. said. Among the major expenses were salary of senators $55,290, pay for employees $117,044, bill drafting $27,878, printing $56,702, and postage $12,900.
Thus, compared with 1959, the pay of the senators climbed $16,990, paychecks for employees were up $15,323 and printing costs increased $8,185.
In order to view in perspective the record total cost of Unicameral, it is necessary to compare it with the tab on the last session of the two-house Legislature.
It took 22 years for the cost of the Unicameral system to equal the $202,593 spent on the last meeting of the bi-cameral in 1935.
Industry Suit
The constitutionality of the Industrial Development Act known as I.D.A. will be tested in the State Supreme Court.
Gov. Frank Morrison directed Atty. Gen. Clarence Meyer to file an original action with the high court.
The court's ruling will decide whether Lancaster County can issue $3 million in revenue bonds for the purpose of construction and acquisition of a plant facility near Lincoln.
Gov. Morrison said investment banking firms will not approve a bond issue until the legality of such a law has been determined by the State Supreme Court.
The law, passed by the 1961 Legislature, is aimed at attracting new industry to Nebraska by permitting local governments to buy or lease land for industrial development.
Agricultural Research
There is a growing acceptance of the idea of agricultural research, says State Agricultural Director Pearlie Finigan.
Finigan said the day is coming soon when Nebraska will no longer have to stand alone as the sponsor of agricultural utilization research projects.
The director commented on a resolution passed by a regional conference of the Council of State Governments.
The Council recognized the need for agricultural research and urged its standing committee on midwestern agriculture to study the advisability of the midwestern states joining in an agricultural research program.
The standing committee was asked to study the activities of the Agricultural Products Utilization Association, Inc., an interstate group of which Nebraska is already a member.
Kearney School
The State's Boy's Training School at Kearney had 42 per cent fewer escapes in the past year under Supt. William Ettinger, the institution's annual report showed.
There has been criticism in the past of escapes from the institution, a minimum custody one.
From June 30, 1960 to June 30, 1961, the report said, the number of boys on parole increased from 166 to 195 but the number of those returning after having been released from the institution climbed six per cent.

Pheasant Season in State Has Grown 24-fold in 35 Years

Sports — Pheasant Season T H
LINCOLN—Nebraska's 72-day pheasant season beginning Nov. 4 is a far cry from 35 years ago, when the state's first hunt on the wary and multi-colored ringneck was authorized. That first season in 1927 was a three-day affair, and in only two counties.
This year's hunters have all of Nebraska in which to hunt pheasants. In the major portion of the state, they have a daily bag limit of 4 cocks and a possession of 16. Limits in the smaller zone, north-central Nebraska, are 2 and 8.
Pheasants have ancestry dating back at least to 1915 in Nebraska, the first year they were released here. For a 10-year period small numbers were planted annually. The birds took hold and the first hunt followed in 1927.
Nebraska's 1961 hunter has a miscellany of other major game species on his calendar: 44 days for quail, 24 prairie chicken and sharp-tailed grouse, 365 for cottontails, 40 for ducks, 60 for geese, 137 for squirrels, 5 for deer rifleman, 101 for deer bowmen, and 3 for antelope.
The number of permits for all species is unlimited with the exception of the rifle seasons on deer and antelope.
Hunting for all upland game birds and small game animals begins daily at sunrise and ends at sunset. Waterfowl hunting is also sunrise to sunset, except on the opening day when it commences at noon.
On the following pages are all of the hunting seasons, excepting big game. Printed copies of the complete regulations, entitled 1961 Guide to NEBRASKA Hunting, are expected to be available next week. They will be sent to all permit vendors for free distribution to Nebraska sportsmen.
