Meat Cookery Lesson For Extension Clubs

By Mrs. Kay Leiding Extension Home Agent

Meat cookery is the lesson which Home Extension Clubs in Cass County are studying during January.

In this every changing world of ours it is only reasonable that some changes are taking place in the foods department.

One recent development is the method used in tenderizing beef. One packing plant is experimenting with an enzyme which is injected into the animal just before slaughter. This meat is being marketed in some Omaha stores and is identified with insert tags as ProTen Tender Beef.

In the Meat cookery lesson we learned that tender cuts of meat (those coming from the area of least exercise) could be cooked by dry heat methods. Broiling, pan broiling or roasting might be used on such tender cuts as steaks, or rib roast.

For less tender cuts (muscles receiving more exercise) a moist-heat method of cooking is recommended. Braising or stewing would be used for chuck or rump roasts, flank or round steaks.

Now with the possibility of having meat tenderized before slaughter our cooking methods would change. Those cuts which we previously classified as less tender could now be cooked by dry heat methods.

If you purchase some of this ProTen Tender Beef, a folder or cooking instructions is also available. A somewhat shorter cooking time and slightly lower internal temperature is being recommended for this meat.

One other part of our Meat Cookery lesson was a review of the various cuts of meat in relation to their position on the carcass. We've discussed, above, the fact that those muscles which receive little exercise are tender and can be broiled or roasted. Those muscles which are exercised a great deal require moist heat and a longer cooking time to make them more tender.

Those of you who purchase meat over the meat counter may not need to learn these retail cuts or their cooking method, however. Recently some meats have been labeled "Savory Oven Roast" or "Savory Broil Steak". This seems to be quite helpful to the consumer. We may see more labels with cooking method rather than the conventional name.

The bulletins which we used for this lesson describe the various methods of cooking beef, veal, lamb and pork. If you would like a copy, please contact the Extension Office.
