4—DEATH OF SPOUSE

Where one spouse dies during the year, a joint return for the couple is permitted if the survivor does not remarry. Of course, if there is a remarriage, a joint return may be filed with the new spouse, but not with the decedent. If an executor or administrator has been appointed for the estate of the deceased, then his agreement is necessary for the joint return. If there is no executor or administrator appointed before the date for the filing of the return, the survivor may file the joint return but the executor or administrator appointed later may specifically disaffirm the joint return within a year after the due date of the filed return.

There is another income-splitting technique available under certain circumstances where the spouse dies and the survivor is maintaining the household for a dependent child or stepchild. Let us take an example. The wife died in 1960. (It could be the other way around). The surviving husband filed a joint return for 1960 and was permitted to take the personal exemption for the deceased wife in 1960 as well as for his child or stepchild, in connection with his 1961 return, he is allowed to compute his tax as if he were filing a joint return so long as he did not remarry and he maintained a household throughout 1961 which was the home of his child or step-child and for whom he furnished more than half of the support.

He cannot claim an exemption for the deceased wife in 1961 but he may for the child or stepchild. This privilege of income-splitting is available for two years after the year of the wife's death, if all of the conditions referred to are met.

HEAD OF HOUSEHOLD
An unmarried person who is carrying the load of a household pays tax at a different rate from one filing a single person's return. Firstly, you must be unmarried on December 31, 1961 and secondly, you must maintain a household. If the household is for your parent or parents, then they must be your dependents but you need not live under the same roof. If the household is for your unmarried child, grandchild, or stepchild, you must live with them but they need not be your dependents. If the household is for any other dependent (which includes a married child) then you must live in the same home. Thus to maintain a household, you must furnish more than half the cost of property taxes, rent, upkeep and repairs, mortgage interest, utility charges, property insurance, food on the premises. You need not be the "boss" in the meaning of family control.

Remember, that you do not qualify as head of a household if there is a multiple support agreement for your parents or any other dependent. If the child or dependent in the household is born or died during the year, you may still qualify as a head of household if the tests were met for the part of the year he lived.

Wisconsin Federal Judge Tehan, a couple of years ago, ruled that the principal place of a bode of the dependent mother of bachelor Rodney C. Welsh was his home even though she never lived in it because of illness. Mother's home was sold when she was hospitalized and her furniture and belongings were moved to Rodney's home where she was expected to reside after her recovery. Judge Tehan agreed with Rodney that he was entitled to use the head of the household tax rates even though mother did not recover from her injury and was kept in a nursing home for over 4 years. This case teaches us that temporary physical absence from the home may be excused on account of school, sickness, vacation.

Marshall Lists Formula for Ag 'Health'

Charles Marshall, Avoca, president of the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation, said today in answer to a question posed to him in an interview, "Farm Bureau is for a federal price support policy which will make it possible for farmers to earn and get a high real income in an economic situation where the maximum of individual freedom and opportunity are preserved."

He said voting delegates, representing the 49 states and Puerto Rico affiliated with the American Farm Bureau, had at their national meeting in December set up guidelines for a properly designed and administered government price support program. He pointed out that one of the sections of these guidelines stated: "ill-advised program can destroy markets, increase costs, restrict individual opportunity, and reduce per-family real income."

Quoting from the 1962 policies of the national organization, Marshall listed the things a government program should do for agriculture:

- Increase economic opportunity.
- Promote efficiency in farming.
- Adhere to the competitive principle.
- Be consistent with the law of supply and demand.
- Strengthen the free market system.
- Stimulate market expansion.
- Encourage soil and water conservation.
- Insure our ability to feed an increasing population.

The Nebraska farm leader challenged, "Measure those qualifications against the 1962 Cochrane-Freeman price support proposals. The scheme now being considered by the Senate and House agricultural committees falls short of every one."

He then listed the factors Farm Bureau delegates said government farm programs should not do:

- Open the way to price-fixing.
- Stimulate excessive production.
- Permit development of monopolies.
- Erode individual freedom.
- Freeze historical production patterns.
- Encourage use of synthetics or other substitutes.
- Shift adjustment burdens from one producer group to another.
- Increase farm production costs.
- Make farmers dependent upon government payments.

Marshall said: "The Cochrane-Freeman farm scheme does every one of these things. This program does not represent the sort of price support policy Farm Bureau delegates declared they were for in December, 1961."
