LOTS OF WATER UP ABOVE—The Platte River looked like this the other day just above the U.S. 73-75 bridges north of here, but the question was: how long? Upstream for some 315 miles was lots of snow, in some areas as much as in 1960 when the Platte among other streams left its banks when the full effect of runoff was felt. Engineers say the important question is how warm it gets and whether nights remain cold to make the runoff less rapid.
