Farewell, Snow

By P. J. Dingman

Amid the first glimpses of spring (temperature-wise, that is) we bid farewell to that retreating layer of lace, and grimly are introduced to the possibility of flooding.

Temperatures over the time span of Thursday to Sunday ranged from 10 to 56 (28 below normal to 18 above normal).

The temperature range:

Suggestions: What To Do Before Flood Comes . . .

LINCOLN—In view of the possible floods which may occur in some parts of Nebraska this year, University of Nebraska Extension specialists have prepared a list of suggestions on what to do before a flood.

—If advised to evacuate, by all means do so without hesitation.

—Prepare now so you can leave immediately, if necessary.

—Talk over your plans now with all members of the family, so the wisest decisions can be made.

—Move important things — food, furniture, appliances, clothing, machinery, livestock, feed, grain, irrigation pipe to higher ground.

—If electrical equipment cannot be moved, parts such as motors or controls might be removed.

—Turn off all electric service at each building and at the meter pole.

—If your domestic water pump is removed, fill all portions of the water system, tanks and pipes with clean water and cap all openings.

—Seal the well, this will not keep contamination out, but will help to keep silt and debris out of the well.

—Turn off all gas appliances and also close shut off valves at storage tanks.

—If you have experienced other floods, you are aware of the mud and debris that can collect in a basement. You can help keep your basement cleaner if you fill flood it with clean water before the flood hits.

—Move irrigation and other power units to higher ground. If this cannot easily be done, remove radiators, air cleaners and carburetors and seal all openings to prevent the entrance of water. Fill the oil reservoirs on engines or pumps and plug

Campus Research Important in Luring Industry

The importance of research and academic facilities in attracting research-oriented industry to Nebraska will be underscored for legislators, civic officials, business and industrial leaders at a public meeting in Lincoln March 28.

Speakers will include Governor Frank B. Morrison, Chancellor Clifford M. Hardin of the University of Nebraska, and President W. A. Strauss of Northern Natural Gas Company, Omaha.

The meeting to be held in the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education 9:30 to 11 a.m., is planned as a forum for the discussion of a stepped-up program of industrial development utilizing the resources offered by Nebraska's universities and colleges.

The session is being sponsored jointly by Northern Natural, Western Power and Gas Company, the Metropolitan Utilities District, the Nebraska Natural Gas Company, the People's Natural Gas Division, and the Council Bluffs Gas Division in cooperation with the University of Nebraska and the Division of Nebraska Resources.

"The importance of campus research facilities in attracting industry to Nebraska cannot be over-emphasized," Randall Klemme, vice president of marketing, research and area development for Northern Natural, declared.

"Expenditures for research and development have tripled nationally in the past eight years," he said, "and this tremendous increase suggests something of the opportunities open to Nebraska. Our state has the potential and with timely planning and preparation Nebraska can share significantly in the nation's industrial expansion."

breathers. CAUTION: Remove all plugs before using equipment. Remove all belts and chains.

—Plug the irrigation pump discharge.

—Don't forget the "can't do without" things of your family — medications, spectacles, diet foods, and proper clothing.

—Collect valuables — legal papers and sentimental treasures.

—All bearings should be filled with fresh lubricant. Do not overfill sealed bearings—see Operators Manual. All open bearings should have some lubricant forced out of the bearing. Be-lubricate before use.

—All open gears, sprockets, pulleys, and wear or cutting surfaces should be protected with a viscous lubricant or rust preventive. Remove all lubricant or preventive before use.

—Leave building doors and windows open to help prevent flood water from shifting them from foundations.

green signs, the same colors as those used on expressway and tollway signs. The new signs glow brightly in automobile headlights at night.

According to Glenn Sunde, Oak Park director of public works, the sign change has received enthusiastic public approval, even from those long-time residents who usually resist most changes in the appearance of the village.

"This is not only an easy, low cost way to make a needed public improvement, it's also a popular program," he said.

The change was inspired by the need for signs that could easily be seen and read after dark, according to Sunde.

Oak Park is one of more than 200 cities and towns that have adopted reflective "expressway green" for street name signs.

THE DRIVER'S SEAT

The world's largest village—Oak Park, Ill. (population, 61,093)—has made a complete change in its street name signs to help villagers and strangers find their way more easily about the Chicago suburb at night.

The village's old black-on-white street name signs have been replaced by large white-on-

County Gets Check For $7,018 from Power District

Omaha Public Power District "in lieu of tax" payments to Cass County for 1961 were brought to a total of $15,343.09 by the delivery of a check for $7,018.04 last week to County Treasurer Mrs. Gwen Scoles.

The check was presented by Scott Beadle, manager of OPPD's South Rural Division at Plattsmouth. It was paid in addition to the previous annual fixed payment of $8,325.05 made by the District during 1961.

The additional $7,018.04 payment made this week came as a result of legislation passed by the Nebraska State Legislature in 1959. The drive to increase "in lieu of tax" payments was sponsored in its service area by the Omaha Public Power District.

Amount of "in lieu of tax" payments is divided by the county between municipalities, school districts, county and state.
