What's the Answer?

Each day numerous questions are mailed and phoned in to the Game Commission offices. This feature includes those frequently asked.
Q—Is a permit needed to hunt either crows or coyo'e?
A—No, both are classified by the Game Commission as nongame and may be hunted at any time. Permission from the land owner to hunt on private land is needed, however.
Q—Does a hen pheasant raise more than one brood per year?
A—No, only one brood. If the nest is destroyed, however, the hen will reneest several times if necessary until she is either successful in bringing off a brood or until it gets too late in the nesting season.
Q—If a person is 65 years old and receives old age assistance, can he get a free fishing permit?
A—Yes, provided he is a resident of Nebraska and obtains a certificate from his county clerk certifying he is a recipient of old age assistance.
Q—If a person is disabled can he get a permit to hunt and fish from a vehicle?
A—Yes, if a person is unable by reason of physical infirmities to hunt and fish in the usual manner, the Game Commission may issue special permits without cost to these persons to hunt and fish from a vehicle. The permit, however, does not authorize that person to hunt from any public highway.
Q—Can youth groups or organizations participate in conservation projects?
A—Yes, the Game Commission has an active program for youth conservation education where projects can be carried out. Write to: Assistant Project Leader, Land Management Division, Game Commission, State Capitol, Lincoln 9.
Q—Does a resident of Nebraska need a hunting or fishing permit before reaching the age of 16?
A—No, however, one must be 16 years of age or older before being allowed to hunt deer or antelope.
Q—How can the channel and blue catfish be identified?
A—The anal fin on the channel catfish is rounded while on the blue catfish it is straight.

Nebraska's Till-Plant System For Corn Cuts Losses, Costs

LINCOLN—The Nebraska till-plant system of producing corn can cut soil losses and production costs in half as compared to conventional tillage methods, University of Nebraska agricultural engineers declared here Wednesday.
Dr. Howard Wittmuss and Delbert Lane spoke at the opening session of the Midwest Agricultural and Equipment Course on Minimum Tillage at the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education.
They said that the Nebraska till-plant system consists of cutting stalks, planting—including tilling, applying herbicides and insecticides — cultivation, and rigging under irrigation. Reduction in soil erosion after planting is possible under the till-plant system when soil remains untilled prior to planting.
Wittmuss cited studies at the North Platte Experiment Station involving "no tillage" plots, (old corn stubble untouched in the the worst, to get a ticket for speeding.

But the Shrader girls, on their way to school, would see a "road full of Indians" in half mile strings, some of them walking some on horses, but all of them passing in a sinister sort of quietness, ignoring the quaking children who stepped off the road to let them pass. Mrs. Creamer says, "The teacher knew we were scared and she would come to the door and stand to watch until the Indians were past."
Mrs. Wulf added that the area where she now lives and where the Shrader log cabin stood was an Indian settlement. The Indians would cut long poles and lash them together to form crude lodges approximately six feet high. The lodges remained after they passed and Mrs. Wulf recalls pulling them down and burning them in her girlhood.
She also recalls the Indian mounds in her fields, now plowed through for many generations, but then mounds where beads and tools could be found. Her father plowed through them with a one horse "double-shovel".
The people of this settlement did not look across endless plains with never a tree or dwelling. They did not locate their nearest neighbor's home by the smoke coming from the ground—a sign of the pioneer dugout. Instead they saw fine oaks and lovely blue grass growing like a carpet. The woody, winding paths were of the ones the Indians had made.
Log cabins nestled against big hills, protected from the harsh Nebraska winds and shaded from the glaring prairie sun by the fine trees. There was plenty of water, plenty of wood and plenty of game.
Although these pioneers had many hardships to face they never regretted settling far from the conveniences of their eastern homes. They buried their dead in rough homemade caskets or wrapped them in a blanket and then took up the tools of everyday life and turned their faces to tomorrow.
You'll laugh when I tell you the directions I received for finding Mrs. Creamer when I stopped at a farmhouse. I was told to go "a quarter of a mile south, then a quarter of a mile east, then south again, and east to the end of the road." Sounds funny but I suppose that by the time the county roads were made the wagons had made such a path following the old Indian trails which dodged around among the trees that the roads had just followed them.
Mrs. Creamer's home town, the now-ghost town of Rock Bluff, was an important town on the river long before Plattsmouth was built. Right at the end of Main Street was a landing where the steamers would stop on their trek up the river, Mrs. Creamer recalls one time when they got word that a Gypsy fortune-teller was on one of the steam-boats at the landing and she and some girlfriends went out to the boat to have their fortunes told.
One of the big events of the year was the Fourth of July parade. Mrs. Creamer describes the parade as "often a mile long." All of the school children from the Lewiston and Kenosha schools would participate along with many others.
After Plattsmouth sprung up the farmers would make a trip over there on occasion. Mrs. Wulf recalls that there was not one bridge between their home and Plattsmouth. Of course, it was easier for a horse to go "down a little ravine and ford the creek" than it would be for your modern car.
Mrs. Creamer has an unhappy memory of one of the Rock Bluff murders. She and Mrs. Sherry were all packed for a trip to the World's Fair at Chicago. "We

A 16-station network has been set up around the world to follow and protect America's astronauts in orbit, says the National Geographic Magazine. The Mercury-tracking outposts can locate a spacecraft flying five miles a second; talk to the man it carries; measure the performance of the astronaut and his vehicle; and by radio signals bring him back to earth.

What's the Answer?

current crop year); minimum tillage (till-plant system) plots; and conventional tillage plots.
Through use of a device called a rainulator, a 3-inch rainstorm was simulated for one hour and a 5-inch-per-hour rainstorm for 18 minutes. A natural storm similar to the latter one could be expected every year in central and eastern Nebraska, he pointed out. The soil in the plots was Bridgeport, a very fine sandy loam, on a 3 to 4 per cent slope.
As a result of the machine-manufactured storms, the conventional tilled plots lost 8 to 10 tons of soil per acre, compared with 3 tons of soil per acre under the till-plant system and less than one ton per acre from the "no tillage plots."
The University engineers pointed out that the till-plant system has worked as well under irrigation as on dryland, and was used on over 10,000 acres of corn during the 1961 crop season.
Lane said that corn yields have been as high as those found under the best conventional systems. Tillage costs were reduced from $13.50 per acre for the conventional system to $6 per acre for the till-plant system. At the same time, according to Lane, labor requirements were reduced nearly one-half, equalling less than one man hour per acre under till-plant.

had everything but the tickets," she says. One day some member of the family rode into town for the mail and came back with the word that Mrs. Sherry had been murdered and the happy plans for the trip must be forgotten.
Five hundred people attended the 50th Wedding Anniversary of the George Shraders, Mrs. Creamer's parents. Two years later the Easter Sunday Cyclone of 1913 took Mrs. Shraders life and demolished the family home.
Mrs. Creamer was married in 1893 at Plattsmouth to Charlie Creamer. That same year she moved into the farm home where she has lived since, alone since 1932. A niece, Mrs. Velma Rea, lives near by and checks on her every morning.
You'd be thrilled with Mrs. Creamer's home. Friends tell her it's like going to the county fair. Dainty crocheted flowers look almost more real than real ones. Homemade quilts are on the bed or in the frame. In the last stages now is a handmade quilt of the "Postage Stamp" pattern which contains 2,654 blocks. All kinds of pretty handmade objects fill the rooms and it's all spiced with dainty, crisp crocheted doilies.
The 89-year-old Mrs. Creamer is a charter member and the oldest member of the Riverview Extension Club. Fellow members say of her, "She has been an uplift and helper in every way for Riverview Club. These people have always received words of kindness from her."
For the past nine years Mrs. Creamer has given one of her quilts to the Riverview Club. They sell chances on them and never make less than $30. Mrs. Creamer also makes quilts for the church and the Lewiston School.
Mrs. Creamer is also a member of the Christian Church at Murray, which was moved from Rock Bluff, and of the Historical Society.
She deserves credit for 10 years of service to the Lewiston Cemetery without taking a cent for her work there.
It's been several years since the Indians passed some scared Shrader girls along the road and its only in their memories that those Indians got filing on down through the years, one of the many things our ancestors had to face to create for us the prosperity we enjoy now.
They're part of America—those silent Indians—part of a heritage hard-earned, part of a pioneer story that must never be forgotten for this is our prologue to the future.
