"The Case of the Disappearing Rabbits!"

Once Upon A Time...

...pneumonia was treated with serum... and there were 26 varieties of that infection... so one manufacturer of drugs used rabbits to test the serum... in fact he used thousands of rabbits... and he had more rabbit pens than anybody... in fact he had millions of dollars invested in his research...

This manufacturer was going to be the first to develop a serum that would whip pneumonia... But, lo! and behold! somebody discovered the sulfa drugs, a much better way to treat that terrible respiratory disease... and, as a result, thousands of rabbits were unemployed...

The manufacturer wrote off the huge investment in research as one of the hazards of the business and hoped that the next time his company would be the first to come up with the better product. Part of your prescription price paid for the discovery of the sulfas... Aren't You Glad?
