'BIRDIE'—This is an artist's conception of a U.S. Army BIRDIE air defense coordination system in action, helping to protect a metropolitan area against enemy air attack. The BIRDIE coordinates the firing of guided missile batteries around cities and strategic military installations by processing locally-generated information fed into it regarding identity of friendly or enemy planes.

The average BIRDIE costs approximately half a million dollars.
The first BIRDIE has been installed at Turner Air Force Base, near Albany, Georgia. It is a small type, directing fire of a limited number of units. A larger unit stores, processes and continuously updates target information in directing fire of a great many missile batteries.
A BIRDIE trainer is to be located at the Army Air Defense School, Fort Bliss, Texas.
No announcement has been made of where the other 17 BIRDIES will be located. Announcement will be made about each one following its installation and when it goes into operation.
The effectiveness, reliability and relatively low cost make the system a key link in Army Air Defense, said Colonel J. Wilson Johnston, Chief of Research and Development, Army Signal Corps. "Its timely development clearly demonstrates the versatility of the modern Army in meeting the defense needs of the day."
The first such system off the Martin Company's production line in Orlando, Florida, is to be operated by personnel of the Army Air Defense Command (ARADCOM) and will be tied into the North American Air Defense Command (NORAD).
Its efficiency is easily seen when it is compared statistically with MISSILE MASTER. BIRDIE occupies 97 per cent less space than MISSILE MASTER; uses 95 per cent less power; and 80 per cent fewer personnel.
Destructive surges of water are caused by any forces—high winds, submarine earthquakes, volcanoes, and earth slides. They are not related to tides, despite the popular term "tidal wave." Wind-driven waves, such as battered the Atlantic coast recently, wreak enormous damage, but they are far less overwhelming than the explosive subterranean upsets of nature. Storm waves seldom exceed 60 miles an hour. Waves traveling from a violent undersea source source may race at speeds of more than 500 miles an hour.

Army To Use Midget Missile Master To Protect Cities, Military Posts

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A midget MISSILE MASTER, much cheaper than its large size counterpart and which can be operated with a tremendous saving in electric power and personnel in protecting U. S. cities from air attack, has been accepted for use by the Department of the Army.

The new system is called BIRDIE — Battery Integration and Radar Display Equipment. It is a transistorized version of cities in the 600,000 population class, has been completed.
The Army announced that installation of the first 19 such pocket-sized air defense coordination systems, designed to help protect military installations, or MISSILE MASTER, the giant nationwide coordinating communications system which uses information it picks up by radar or information fed into it regarding identity of friendly or enemy planes.

Cass Countyman

by a German by the name of Jannings. The mill was never operated because the settlers could not protect their sheep from the coyotes but the name Factoryville stuck.

Early Factoryville could boast of a good many fine businesses and organizations, among them a flour mill, several stores, a hotel, church, post office, IOOF Lodge and even a little Methodist Academy perched upon a hill and dignified by the name of Factoryville College.

Factoryville had its share of characters who would seem to step straight from the pages of the chronicles of the wild west.

The town was a favorite hang-out of George McWaters and Quin Bohannon, who once killed a man because he didn't like the number of d's he wrote in the word peddler. These two well-known outlaws worked together, running stolen horses from Nebraska to sell in Missouri and stealing Missouri horses to be sold in Nebraska.

A favorite trick of theirs during any lull was to wake the town by pretending to get angry at each other and staging a fake duel in the street, finally riding away in opposite directions, unharmed.

Notorious as Quin Bohannon was, the surprising member of the family was Bob Bohannon, brother of the outlaw, who was one of Factoryville's first preachers.

Another of Factoryville's ghosts is Joe Maddox the first carrier on the Star route. Joe was a little dark man who rode the trail at the gallop with revolvers swinging in their holsters on each hip.

The town's first doctor was and old Scotsman of forgotten name who used to keep his medicine in enormous demijohns. Later Dr. Bruce Wallace became doctor, bringing with him from Missouri a team of blooded horses which he would race with anyone he met while making his calls.

One of the most famous happenings of the town was the still talked about fight between George Miller and William Lindsey who was just out of the coal mines of Wales. It was the first time Lindsey had encountered brass knucks and he was badly beaten up but he stayed with it until Miller hit him one last lick and ran.

Another giant of Factoryville history and legend is Ahijah Munn who, for fun at threshing time, would seize common-sense men by the scruff of the neck and seat of the pants and toss them to the top of the strawstack.

An old newspaper of the Banning's records the first postmaster of both Factoryville and Union as R. D. Frans. According to the paper Union was platted by John Lynn grandfather of Mrs. Joe Banning on January 2, 1838. This was the end of Factoryville. The Missouri-Pacific had chosen to ignore the town on its way to Omaha so the town moved to the railroad and Strigtown sprang up along the tracks. Now, nothing but the ghosts of long forgotten stories lurk in the pasture that once was Factoryville.

The Hollis Bannings turned from their discussion of the town to mention his father W. B. Banning. It was W. B. with the help of Hollis, who planted the orchard at Union in 1916. Mr. Banning was in addition a very civic minded gentleman and he was active in many organizations.

Mr. Banning has always been proud of his town and tried always to keep it free of anything he felt might be a bad influence. He gave a good many years to the fight for his ideals.

The coming of the railroad changed many things for Factoryville and Union. It banished forever infamous names like Quin Bohannon.

It thrust into obscurity the town called Factoryville which had been planned as a great industrial center.

It meant the advent of an entirely new town, Union.
But to the Bannings it was simply the coming of progress, one more step upward for the community they loved and served.

Their long years of devotion are far beyond the scope of repayment or proper recognition, they can only be measured in the admiration and respect of the townspeople.

W. B., eldest member of the family, was born in 1869 in old Wyoming Precinct. He operated the Union Elevator in 1888 and a few years later purchased the lumber yard, operating it until he planted the orchard east of town.

Interested in politics, W. B. was County Commissioner in 1900 and State Senator seven terms until 1934. He was also State Fair president and treasurer for a total of 25 years.

He is survived by son Hollis who operates the present orchard and his wife Ananda who is Postmistress at Union. They have a daughter, Barbara.

Jim Hurst Wins 100 in :10.4

Midland won the final event, the mile relay, to reach the tie.
