Steps for Easier Spring Cleaning Are Suggested

Lincoln—Do you dread spring cleaning? Have you found ways to simplify the task? If not, here are some suggestions from Clara N. Leopold, Extension home management specialist at the University of Nebraska.

First, reduce your energy output by cutting down your steps, stoops, and stretches. Start by storing cleaning equipment at a convenient height.

Second, take a critical look at your tools and equipment. The right tool for each job simplifies the work. If you don't have it, consider renting the tool. A waxing and polishing machine rented for a day can do a better job. It takes only one-third the time and a fraction of the effort.

Third, review your habits. A simple change in method might make it possible for you to do your work quicker and easier. If you always have cleaned one room at a time, it might be easier to do all the windows at one time, or all the floors. Jobs that need to be done only once a year could be spread out so that they will not need to be done at the same time. Experiment until you find the order and method of work that is easiest for you.

Fourth, examine your standards. Would something less than perfect be acceptable? Are you doing jobs that really don't need to be done? Flexible standards can do wonders for your disposition.
