Grouse Trapping Work Completed

Grouse come in colors this year—take your choice of red, green, blue, or yellow—according to game technicians of the Game Commission.

Birds on the Nobrara National Wildlife Refuge trapped and banded by Howard Woon, refuge manager, were also color marked to show their age and sex. Red coloring indicates adult males; blue, adult females; green, immature males; and yellow, immature females.

The color-marked birds will help provide information on daily and seasonal movements of the grouse. This is an area in which there is little information available at the present time.

These birds will wear the new colors until the feathers are replaced during the summer molt. Four of the red marked birds have been seen since they were dyed. All four were sighted on a dancing grounds proudly displaying their new plumage for the benefit of visiting hens.

In addition to being dyed, the 70 birds on the Nobrara Refuge were also banded. There were 48 grouse on the Valentine Refuge trapped and banded.

Karl Menzel, Game Commission's district game supervisor at Bassett, said in a report that two birds trapped two years earlier had been recaptured. No. 345104 was trapped at the Pony Lake subheadquarters on February 21, 1960, and then again this year on February 14 near the same location.

'Recreation' Subject of Talk To Rotary Club

Outdoor Recreation was the subject of a talk Tuesday noon to the Rotary Club.

Harold Edwards, resident manager of the Waterfowl Management Area here and a Rotarian was speaker.

He spoke of state and national recreational resources, usage and projected usage.

A trend he pointed to is "classification" of recreational facilities—setting aside of areas for particular types of outdoor activities.

Such "zoning" is illustrated in South Carolina, he said, by division of a lake by an artificial dike into separate areas, set aside for water skiing and for fishing.

Among guests at the meeting were High School Rotarians Tim Fischer and William Royer.

Bluebird News Smiling Blue Birds made Easter hats at their meetings April 19 and 26 they baked cookies and Brownies.

Hostesses during April were Susan Lutz, Pamela Miller and Faye Misenheimer. Pamela Guelhstorff, reporter.
