Poultrymobile To Be Displayed July 25 at UN

LINCOLN — Open house for the new, unique University of Nebraska Poultrymobile will be held at 2:30 p.m. July 25 on the Agricultural College campus.

The Poultrymobile, a 36 x 8 foot structure, was custom built according to poultry house specifications on a conventional house trailer frame. Modern poultry house construction materials were used to give a functional and realistic appearance to the unit.

A portion of the interior is exposed, allowing the details of construction materials, insulation, and wiring to be viewed easily.

The unit will be used to advance the poultry industry throughout the state, according to John L. Skinner, Extension poultry specialist at the University.

Teaching aids and the latest poultry equipment will be displayed inside. There is sufficient room for approximately 30 persons inside the unit at one time, and the interior fixtures are flexible so that slides or movies can be shown to small groups of people, or classes and meetings held there.

E. W. Janke, director of the Agricultural Extension Service, is expected to be the first official visitor. Dr. John L. Adams, chairman of the Poultry Department, and Skinner will act as hosts at the open house.

The poultrymobile will be available on request from the University throughout the state at fairs, field trips, civic and community events, school functions, and industry gatherings, Skinner added.
