Clements Completes Grad Banking School

Dwight Clements, cashier of the American Exchange Bank in Elmwood, Nebraska, was a recent graduate of the University of Wisconsin's 18th annual Graduate School of Banking, which was held August 13-25.

Walter W. Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, delivered the featured address. Other featured speakers were Edward Gudeman, Under Secretary of Commerce; Rep. Walter H. Judd, R. Minn., and John W. Lehman, deputy executive director of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress.

The commencement address was delivered by Sam B. Fleming, president of the American Bankers Association and president, Third National Bank, Nashville.

Members of the school's 100-man faculty also lectured on varied aspects of banking. Faculty members, drawn from banks and financial institutions, include men versed in law, government, finance, economics and business.

Generally acknowledged as one of the four leading regional graduate banking schools in America, the University of Wisconsin course was organized in 1945. The 1,269 students attending this year's session established an attendance record, according to Dr. Herbert V. Prochnow, director of the school and president, First National Bank, Chicago.

Students must attend the course for three mid-summer sessions to qualify for graduation. Each student must complete a number of general banking problems or prepare a thesis on some specific banking problem.

Required courses include investments, agricultural economics and agricultural credit, commercial bank administration, installment and consumer credit, real estate financing, business conditions, corporate finance, country bank management, internal organization and personnel, international finance, monetary policy, and trust department procedure and personnel.
