TOYS? Well, now that you mention it, Mr. Claus, there are some things that would be nice, if I can just recall Regardless of their age, visitors to Santa Land in Plattsmouth (parents, too) had one thing in common: the meeting with Santa was a big thrill and well worth the effort of standing in line.

Worship The King!

By CHARLES NEWOW
Pastor, 1st Lutheran Church

Baking and shopping and just having fun
Keeps all of us tired and some on the run.
Trees and tinsel and cookies and cards

Presents and goodies just leave hearts hard.
The extra work and worry
Makes many of us surly.
At a time like this you would think we could be

A little more considerate of everyone we see.
When brightness and joy should be filling each room
Inside of each person are black clouds of gloom,
For most have forgot
That Christmas is not
Just a holiday for play;
But a glorious day
When we commemorate the birth

Of our Savior come to earth,
Christ, the King.
Therefore it's fitting
For each one to bring
Himself before God's throne
While leaving off worries of home.

There as we bow in true worship and prayer
Comes peace, that gift so fair.
For His love forgives us
Once more at Christmas.
Now peace is to men who can sing
Worship the King!

Lonnie Jones of Nehawka among Select Archers

LINCOLN, Nebr.—With about a week remaining in the statewide archery deer season, the number of successful bowmen now stands at 239, the Game Commission reports. The season ends December 31, one-half hour after sunset.

During the past week 25 sportsmen scored to boost the success ratio to 15.7 per cent. The total number of permits issued to date is 1,523.

The most productive area during the week was near Columbus where Larrell Aikins, Marcel Czapia, Dennis Novicki, and Lavern Zimmer, all of Columbus, each brought in a whitetail.

Latest successful archers included Lonnie Jones of Nehawka who bagged a whitetail.

Tire Chains 'Should Go on In 6 Minutes'

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa.—In the wake of severe winter storms which have already paralyzed many sections of the country with chainless cars stalled and abandoned in the streets, Prof. Amos E. Neyhart of The Pennsylvania State University urges instruction on how to apply tire chains for all high school driver training courses.

"Teen agers can be taught how to apply a pair of chains in six minutes," said Prof. Neyhart, who is also driver training authority for the American Automobile Association. "Wide application of such knowledge," he says, "would greatly reduce chaotic traffic delays and wrecks from winter skids which cost millions of dollars annually every time snow and ice conditions develop."

Such training, says Prof. Neyhart, would also help make American youth more self-reliant . . . and some of this might brush off on their parents if they learned how easy it is to mount tire chains in the modern way with an applicator. They would thus avoid getting themselves stuck and creating bottle necks for other properly equipped vehicles. Most truck drivers face up to their responsibilities in these conditions and install tire chains in time to keep their loads going in severe winter conditions, Prof. Neyhart commented. He did criticize gas station operators, however, who fail to teach service station attendants how to mount tire chains in quick, efficient fashion.

Under the auspices of the National Committee for Motor Fleet Supervisor Training, the Pennsylvania educator has traveled extensively in the interest of safe driving training techniques. A recognized authority on transportation traffic and economic problems, he directs courses in 65 universities and colleges in the United States and Canada to instruct teachers on safe driving methods for high school training and in-service training for the motor transport industry.
