

Electric Ordinance Repeal Or Amendment Asked Here

After a discussion of more than an hour Monday night on the city's Electrical Ordinance, the City Council passed this motion:

"To lay aside all inspections and permit fees on appliances and entrances for 60 days effective Aug 13 to permit the ordinance to be worked out satisfactorily to appliance dealers, electricians and the general public."

The motion was made by Elmore Brink of the Council's Lighting Committee.

It followed a discussion, sometimes heated, in which local appliance dealers, electricians and Council members spoke.

Thirteen appliance dealers had signed a petition calling for repeal of the Electrical Ordinance.

Dealers who spoke Monday night said they thought the system of licensing under the ordinance was hurting their sales because of a shortage of electricians and consequent delay in appliance installation.

At one point, Robert Aspedon, chairman of the Lighting Committee, suggested amending the ordinance to provide for a special examination and license for residential wiring only and permitting wiring of one circuit without permit or inspection requirements and re-use of this privilege within 30 days.

Ernest Elliott, manager of Consumers Public Power District here, said he favored repeal of the ordinance, that his office has had complaint calls continuously since the ordinance has been in effect.

Electricians speaking, mostly on application of the ordinance, were Ray Harold Jr. and Harland Hurst.

Several appliance dealers spoke — among them Chas. Wurga who said he had no quarrel with the electricians or anyone else but was interested in seeing adequate wiring service available promptly; and Leo Scanlan who expressed concern that something be done quickly because the holiday season is approaching.

Bob White, a homeowner who had had wiring done recently, complained about what he called a lack of control in the ordinance over the quality of work done by electricians and the prices they charge.

He said an electrician, not local, had put in a larger service than he needed and had charged more than agreed upon.

Lee Glenn, the city's Electrical Inspector, said that several complaints of his ordering specific larger size entrances were not true.

It was suggested that the size of entrance or service is dictated not by the ordinance, or the wiring code, or the inspector but by "common sense."

There was general (though not unanimous) agreement among those present that the ordinance (and the 1962 National Electrical Code which the ordinance adopts) should not be abandoned.

No meeting to work on a solution has been set yet, the Lighting Committee said today.

1915 Ford Brings $1,430 (Cost: $462.10)

Monday was an end of an era on the John Baier, Sr. farm 7 miles west of Union when the personal property of the Baier estate was sold at public auction, according to Paul Fauquet, executor of the estate.

There were countless items of yesteryear offered for sale, many of which sold at many times their original cost.

A 1915 Ford Touring Car, brass radiator and all, sold for $1,430. According to the original bill of sale, the original cost was $462.10.

A 1915 spring wagon which had been used very little and had been kept in a shed over the years sold for $150, an old-fashioned organ stool with a worn tapestry cover brought $30 and a string of sleigh bells found a new owner for the sum of $25.

A team of spotted work horses, described by Fauquet as gentle as kittens, weighing about 1,400 lbs. each with a set of harness brought $280.00. They had long since lost their youth and were described as "smooth mouthed" in the advertisement that was published in The Journal. The sale drew bidders from many neighboring states according to Rex Young, who, with Ed Morris, cried the sale.
