Livestock Markets
Protest USDA's 'Dual Grading'

The recently announced decision of the United States Department of Agriculture to continue their dual grading program on a "modified basis" drew sharp criticism from the River Markets Group. The group is comprised of the Slouk F&M, Sioux City, Omaha, St. Joseph, Kansas City and St. Louis central public markets.

Hugh Maclier, a commission man on the Omaha livestock market and current vice-chairman of the Group, urged the department to reconsider their attempts to make this totally unpopular program compulsory.

"Dual grading was offered during a full one year trial period, with only a very slight increase shown for the service by the meat industry," said Maclier. "This should provide conclusive proof," he continued, "of the program's failure to meet the needs of the industry, even on an optional basis."

"The River Markets Group cannot condone, as being in the best interests of the nation's livestock producers, any attempt to enforce the 'cutability' concept in Federal meat grading. We can do nothing but join the meat packers, retailers and producers alike in criticizing this unwanted grading service."

Maclier continued, "If the Department of Agriculture wants to be of real service to American agriculture, they should attempt to come up with a workable plan to sharply reduce the imports of meat from foreign countries." Maclier indicated that the River Markets Group would support a sound program aimed in that direction.
